Roosevelt Vows A New Deal Free Of Legal Upsets

States Rights Urged As Basis of Liberty

Chief Executive Lauds Robinson as Leader in Arkansas.

Centennial Stadium, Little Rock, Ark., June 10.—Every objective of the New Deal can and will be achieved within the meaning of the Constitution, President Roosevelt pledged tonight.

Touching briefly on the historical background of the State of Arkansas, whose centennial was being observed, Roosevelt drew from its history examples to support assertion that his program fits under the broad purposes of the Nation's charter.

The very acquisition of the Louisiana Purchase, from which Arkansas was carved, was accomplished by Thomas Jefferson despite the warnings of members of the legal profession that the purchase was illegal, he said.

"He was told by some of his closest advisers and friends that the Constitution of the United States contained no clause authorizing him to purchase or acquire additional territory; and that, because specific authority did not exist under that great charter of government, none coulid be exercised," Roosevelt said.

None Took Case to Court.

"Jefferson replied that there were certain inherent qualities of sovereignty which could not be separated from a federal government, if such a federal government was permanently to endure, furthermore . . . nobody carried the case to the Supreme Court, and as a result, Louisiana and Arkansas and Missouri and Iowa and Minnesota and Kansas and Montana and North Dakota and South Dakota and the larger portions of Wyoming and Colorado and Nebraska and Oklahoma fly the Stars and Stripes today."

Jefferson's act was within the broad purposes of the Constitution, he implied, and similarly is the New Deal program.

"The Constitution provided the best instrument ever devised for the continuation of fundamental principles," Roosevelt said. "Under its broad purposes, we can and intend to march forward, believing, as the overwhelming majority of Americans believe, that it is intended to meet and fit the amazing physical, economic and social requirements that confront us in this generation."

Roosevelt said it was among the pioneers who settled in the newly opened frontier lands that "the personal qualities of men and not the inheritance of caste or of property were the measure of worth, true Democratic government was given its greatest impetus."

Life of Pioneer Gone.

Now, he said, the life of the pioneer is gone. Its simplicity has been replaced by a social civilization of great complexity, calling for greater organization in government. He asserted that mechanization of industry and mass production has put great power in the hands of few, creating a governmental problem of supervising that the benefits of the mechanization be distributed to the whole people.

"Self-government must and shall maintain," Roosevelt said, "freedom in matters which are primarily of local concern; county government must retain the functions which logically belong to the county unit; State government must and shall retain State sovereignty over all those activities of government which effectively and efficiently can be met by the States."

Thus, he reasoned, the country's needs have reached a point at which the Federal Government is best fitted to satisfy certain of the Nation's problems.

"These problems with growing intensity, now flow past all sectional limitations and extend over the vast breadth of our whole domain.

Nearly 40,000 persons were jammed in the stadium. He was acclaimed wildly by the audience, a decidedly Democratic one.

Mr. Roosevelt posed for a picture, while surrounding him, smiling, were Senator Robinson, Senator Hattie Carraway, Jesse Jones, chairman of the RFC, and a host of State and local officials.

Teacher Lists Given Blanton; Board Protests

Anti-Sisson Bill Literature Mailed After Texan Gets Private Addresses.

Representative Thomas L. Blanton's request for a mailing list of teachers and other public school employes, presumably to circularize them against the Sisson "anti-Red rider" bill, precipitated a heated school board discussion yesterday.

The outburst, in which all members of the board present took part, came when Charles B. Degges, secretary to the board, reported he had heeded the request and turned over to Blanton, who is chairman of the House sub-committee on District appropriations, the names and addresses of all teachers and officials in the school system.

Several members criticised Degges for giving out the list without first consulting the board.

Tired of Kowtowing.

"I am tired of kowtowing to Blanton," said George M. Whitwell, who led the objecting.

"The secretary should have asked us about the matter before giving out the list," said J. Hayden Johnson.

A school board rule closes the list of teachers, other employes and pupils to any person not connected with the school system. Degges said he though he was acting within the rule when he gave the list to Blanton.

"Did Blanton say what he wanted the list for?" asked Whitwell.

"He said for the official business of his committee," replied Degges.

"I think I can throw some light on what he wants the list for," said Superintendent of Schools Frank W. Ballou, producing two pieces of mail he had received yesterday morning.

One was a "public document," a reprint of testimony given by George E. Sullivan and Gen. Amos A. Fries in defense of Blanton's Red rider, together with attacks on the character education program in the District schools and on alleged Communism in the schools. The other was a reprint of a speech Blanton made in the House on April 2. It was entitled "Incontrovertible Evidence of Communism in the Schools.

The board adopted a motion, introduced by Robert A. Maurer, that Degges write Blanton, requesting him to send the teachers "full information" on the red-rider hearings.

"If the teachers are to be circularized, we'd just as soon they get more than Blanton's 'selected excerpts,'" said Whitwell.

A report, submitted by Henry I. Quinn, the board's representative on the National Capital Park and Planning Commission, on a plan to co-ordinate play and recreational facilities in the District of Columbia was approved with modifications.

British Warn Japan to Stop Illegal Trade

By the United Press.

London, June 10.—Youthful British Foreign Secretary Anthony Eden today implicitly warned Japan to cease alleged connivance in wholesale smuggling of drugs into northern China.

Speaking in the House of Commons, Eden said the British government has made further strong representations to Japan complaining about the North China smuggling situation.

As a result, Eden said, a Japanese foreign ministry official has been sent to investigate the smuggling.

"However, no specific assurance has been received that Chinese customs officials on sea and land will in the future not be prevented from carrying out their duties without hindrance and without limitation of arms which they carry for that purpose," he said.

It is believed that the British government's chief economic adviser, Sir Frederick Leith Ross, is now in Tokyo discussing the smuggling problem with Japanese officials.

This illicit trade has undermined Chinese finances, depriving Nanking of normal customs revenues and endangering repayment of British loans.

Meanwhile, British authorities anticipate renewed Japanese military intervention in China this summer.

Despite the recent joint protests from Washington and London concerning smuggling, Japan confidently assumes that in a crisis neither the United States nor Great Britain would take forcible measures to protect China's independence, authorities said.

Martial Law Set Up.

Canton, June 10 (U.P.).—Martial law was declared in Changsha, capital of Hunan Province, today as civil war between the central and southwestern armies seemed imminent.

Officials of the Cantonese government anticipated early fighting as the Cantonese troops, numbering more than 200,000 trained, well-equipped men, continued their march northward, avowedly to halt Japanese military encroachment on North China.

The Cantonese army tonight was within two days' march of Changsha. On the other side of Changsha, just south of Lake Tungting, the Nanking government reportedly had at least 175,000 troops concentrated. If hostilities break out, Changsha appeared to be the probable theater of war, at least during the first action.

The situation was equally as critical in other sections, prompting the Canton government to recruit thousands of additional soldiers.

The present strength of the southwestern army was estimated at 500,000.

Nanking forces on the other side of the Fuiken border are estimated at 350,000. The central government also has 400,000 other troops in Kiangsi, Kweichow and Szechuen provinces.

Warships Sent to Canton.

London, June 10 (A).—Dispatches from Hongkong by the Reuters (British) News Agency said that the British gunboats Cicala and Tarantula had been ordered tonight to Canton.

Gold Star Mothers Will Ask Pension

By the Associated Press.

Detroit, June 10.—Delegates to the third national convention of the American Gold Star Mothers, Inc., adopted a resolution today asking pensions of $50 monthly and hospitalization and medical care after 1938 for mothers of soldiers who died during the World War.

"Each gold star mother has been receiving $57.50 per month since her son's death, but these payments from Government insurance will cease in 1938," explained Mrs. Alice Davis, of Los Angeles, chairman of the resolutions committee.

Support for pension legislation has been promised by veterans' organizations, she said.

Cleveland, June 10.—Knuckling down to the liberal views of Senator William E. Borah, the Republican resolutions subcommittee tonight reached full agreement on a concise platform eliminating all mention of a gold standard and declaring flatly against American entry into the World Court or League of Nations.

At 11 p. m. the full resolutions committee was called into session to receive a report striking middle ground between widely divergent Republican views, but designed to hold the independent Idahoan within party folds by meeting him more than half way.

The full committee adjourned shortly after midnight to resume deliberations at 9 a. m.

Platform Is Outlined.

In the brief space of approximately 3,000 words, a quarter the length of the 1932 platform, major planks are said to provide:

A demand for sound currency without specification of the gold standard, but an expression against a managed currency; pegging the dollar at existing levels; repeals of the President's power to devalue the currency.

A candid statement against American entry into either the League or the Court, reversing the party's stand for World Court entry in 1932.

A declaration for State and local administration of relief, largely along lines suggested by Senator Arthur H. Vandenberg, of Michigan.

Abandonment of a stand for a constitutional amendment giving the States authority to legislate in the wages and hours field, largely predicated on women's party opposition to such protection for women alone.

Pillar of Farm Plank.

A farm plank, of which a State-administered soil conservation program, with tariff equalization payments to farmers, is the pillar.

A plank thrust at excessive Federal spending, but without any definite statement on the time in which the national budget should be balanced.

Tariff changes, embodying drastic revision of reciprocal tariff policies.

Negotiating through William Allen White, of Kansas, and John Thomas, of Idaho, both friends of long standing, Borah early yesterday submitted his foreign relations plank, making a flat declaration against foreign entanglements, and mentioning the League and the World Court by name.

After a long afternoon session at the Cleveland Hotel, Herman M. Langworthy, chairman of the resolutions sub-committee, released the following statement:

"The sub-committee of the committee on resolutions has invited Senator Borah to meet with it for an exchange of views, but he has replied that in view of the fact that the sub-committee already has taken favorable action on certain suggestion which he has submitted, he feels that his appearance before the sub-committee is unnecessary."

Langworthy declined to elaborate further, or to say what were the nature of Borah's recommendations. White, however, had declared he received the Idahoan's foreign relations plank. The Idahoan repeated-

85 Votes Are Pledged to Kansan; Pennsylvania Offers 50 More.

Poll at Caucuses Settles All Doubt

Candidate Now Has 551 Backers; First Ballot Choice Is Certain.

By Felix Bruner.
A Staff Correspondent.

Cleveland, June 10.—Gov. Alf M. Landon of Kansas clinched the Republican Presidetnial nomination today.

Late tomorrow, or possibly Friday, the Republican National Convention will meet and take one ballot, which will amount only to ratification of the nomination.

All doubt that Landon will be named on the first ballot disappeared this afternoon when the New York delegation, in caucus, decided to cast 85 of its 90 votes for the Kansas Governor. Earlier in the day Pennsylvania decided to give Landon 50 of its 75 votes.

These two great States, with the largest delegations in the convention, held the balance of power. Their swing to Landon gave him far more than enough votes for the nomination.

It appeared possible tonight that the stampede to Landon would reach such proportions as to amount virtually to nomination by acclamation.

An Open Session.

The meeting which ended all doubts, even those of Landon's most ardent opponents, was held in a "smoke-filled room" in the Cleveland Hotel. But it bore no resemblance to the "smoke-filled rooms" of other years. The doors were wide open. Anybody who wished could walk in, and a great many persons did.

The meeting was [illegible] caucus of the New York delegation. The delegates went on record publicly, each answering with the name of his candidate as the roll was called. The final vote stood: Landon, 85 Frank E. Gannett, New York publisher, 2; Herbert Hoover, 1; Alfred P. Sloan, jr., president of General Motors Corporation, 1. One delegate was absent.

The only controversy in the meeting was over the question of whether a poll should be taken immediately or whether it should be postponed until tomorrow. Among those who insisted on an immediate poll was Ogden Mills, former Secretary of the Treasury. He insisted that the delegation should leave no doubt as to where it stood and that it should avoid all possibility of rumors that it was attempting to make a "deal."

When a voice vote was taken on the motion for an immediate poll, there were not more than three or four dissenters.

Hilles Sets Example.

The first name on the roll call was that of Charles D. Hilles, national committeeman. He never had made known publicly his preference for President.

"It has been felt," he said, "that this year it would be necessary for us to carry the States west of the Mississippi. There has been no resistance to the proposal that the Middle West and the Far West should develop candidates. It may be fairly stated that the West has made its selection.

"I cast my vote for Gov. Alf M. Landon."

The announcement was greeted with loud applause. After that it was a landslide.

Mills voted for Landon. So did Representative Snell and Representative Wadsworth. Mrs. Ruth Baker Pratt cast her vote for the Kansan. As the balloting ended two delegates changed their votes, one switching from Senator Arthur H. Vandenberg, of Michigan, to Landon and the other from Gannett to Landon.

The Landon camp was jubilant. For the first time since the campaign started, John Hamilton, Lan-

Overthrow of Eastern Hierarchy for Midwestern Provincialism Has Led Kansan's Followers to Frown on Excessive Swing.

By Felix Morley.
Editor of The Post.

Cleveland, June 10.—An important aspect of the revolutionary change now taking place in the leadership of the Republican Party has become very apparent in Cleveland. It is the growth of a highly nationalistic and somewhat provincial note, never predominant in the days when Wall Street bankers and Eastern industrialists were in a position to swing G. O. P. councils.

The covered wagon drawn by four oxen, which is part of the Landon publicity layout, and the ousting of Ogden Mills as New York's representative on the vital resolutions committee, are typical outward signs of the Republican transition from the party of Big Business to a modernized Jacksonian democracy. But there are other evidences of fundamental importance from the viewpoint of national rather than party policy.

The keynote address of Senator Steiwer last night, and to a somewhat lesser extent the speech of Representative Snell this morning, had one striking characteristic in common. Both frequently used the adjective "alien" in a hostile and invidious sense, carrying the implication that the rest of the world is somehow hostile to America, and that foreign influences of every kind should be repelled as a patriotic act.

"It Coddles Agitators."

Senator Steiwer carried this argument to an extreme when he denounced the New Deal policy as one which "harbors aliens who are not entitled to remain in America," following this with an attack upon the Administration because "it coddles agitators and encourages the purveyors of unrest at a time when the Nation needs a firm and dignified leadership."

From this part of his speech it would be easy for an uncritical mind to draw the conclusion that all foreigners in this country are

Cleveland, June 10.—The Colladay delegates and alternates were seated by the Republican National Convention today, but that action did not end the G. O. P. feud in the District of Columbia.

There was every indication that Republican National Committeeman Edward F. Colladay and Leo A. Rover, former District attorney, would continue their rivalry for the next four years.

The prospect is for a stirring fight in the Republican primary election in "voteless Washington" prior to the 1940 national convention.

The committee on rules of the Republican National Convention, at a meeting yesterday, voted to increase the District's representation in 1940 from three to six delegates.

Convention Wires Sabotage Charged

By the Associated Press.

Cleveland, June 10.—Representative Chester C. Bolton, of Cleveland, told Mayor Harold H. Burton today that interruptions in the public address and broadcasting system at the National Republican Convention were deliberate sabotage.

The mayor ordered a squad of 20 detectives and as many additional uniformed officers assigned to Public Hall, where the convention is in session.

Bolton claimed that despite periodic checks of wiring, unknown persons slipped in and cut wires leading to loudspeakers, damaged a Columbia Broadcasting Co. cable and tampered with main cable lines.

Thomas S. Sabin, director of the Republican National Committee's radio division, said there was no doubt the wire cutting was carefully planned.

Senator Steiwer's keynote speech last night was interrupted by failure of the public address system, newly installed for the convention.

45-Min. Demonstration Is Stirred by Former President's Speech.

He Urges a 'Holy' Freedom Crusade

A Staff Correspondent.

Cleveland, June 10.—Appealing to his party to launch an uncompromising fight to restore economic freedom and individual initiative to America, former President Herbert Hoover tonight threw the Republican National Convention into pandemonium.

For 45 minutes the delegates to the convention cheered the former President at the conclusion of his speech, and stopped the only because Chairman Bertrand H. Snell summarily adjourned the meeting until tomorrow.

It was the greatest ovation ever given to Hoover. At no time during his tenure of the Presidency was he the object of such wild cheering. Had he returned to the platform after he left it, undoubtedly a new record in ovations would have been set. As it was, the convention delegates and spectators were chanting "We Want Hoover" long after he had boarded a train for New York.

But this unprecedented scene held little real political significance. It was nothing more than an overwhelming testimonial of faith in and affection for the man who eight years ago carried the party to the highest pinnacle of success it has ever achieved, even if he also four years later carried it down to the most devastating defeat.

Breaks Republican Ice.

The only substantial effect of Hoover's appearance before the convention was to instill a spirit of militant enthusiasm into the delegates and the thousands of Republicans who jammed the galleries. It distinctly broke the frosty atmosphere and apathy which hung over this gathering until tonight.

It is possible that as a result of tonight's enthusiasm over the former President he may receive a few more votes for renomination than otherwise would have been given to him. But there is no possibility now of a successful boom being launched for Hoover.

Yet, tonight's performance disturbed some of the Landon leaders, even though they passed out word to all their followers to join enthusiastically in the cheering. And it is entirely possible that had not the Landon managers nailed down overwhelming majorities in the huge New York and Pennsylvania delegations today, Hoover tonight might have been on the road to a renomination. But that is out of the question. Gov. Alf M. Landon surely will be nominated on the first ballot.

Makes Impartial Speech.

And none realizes that more fully than Hoover. He came to Cleveland without though of personal achievement and without malice toward any candidate for the nomination or any segment of the party. He came to do what he could do to stir his party into action, to break the apathy which has held Republicans in its grip this week.

By no construction can it be said that Hoover turned thumbs down on any candidate for the nomination—as some thought he might do—nor can it be said that he pointed an approving finger in any direction. It was in that respect an impartial speech. But it was a vigorous appeal of a middle-of-the-road conservative Republican to his party for unceasing warfare on the New Deal.

The convention was aroused to its highest pitch of enthusiasm not by what Hoover said, but by his mere appearance on the platform. As he stepped to the rostrum cheering broke out which lasted ten minutes and then was subdued only with difficulty.

Throughout his speech he drew rounds of applause, yells and shouts from his audience and once he was forced to suspend for a minute by a floor demonstration set off by the colored national committeeman from Mississippi, Perry Howard.

But it was when he concluded that the rafters really resounded with applause for the former Presi-

Musicians Form Own Group To Sponsor Summer Concerts

Under the name of the Washington Summer Concerts Association, the members of the National Symphony Orchestra will sponsor a series of 24 "Symphonies on the Potomac" this summer.

This was decided at a meeting of the musicians yesterday at which the new association was formed and a board of directors chosen. Thomas J. Mullikin was named chairman of the board and business manager of the orchestra.

At the meeting yesterday, the musicians raised $2,500 in contributions from their members. Leading the list was Sylvia Meyer, harpist of the orchestra, who contributed $500.

The $2,500 will form the nucleus of a "music-chest" which the orchestra members hope later to augment. They have broadcast an appeal for funds to help underwrite the coming season.

Present plans of the association call for an eight-week series, with three concerts a week, on Saturday, Sunday and Wednesday evenings. They will be held at the Watergate site used last summer by the National Symphony Orchestra Association.

According to Mullikin, C. Marshall Finnan, parks director, has pledged the musicians that he will co-operate if assured that the group is in earnest.

The association plans to have several outstanding conductors work alternately in directing its concerts. Among those who have been asked to fill the post are Hans Kindler, Jose Iturbi, Wilhelm Von Hoogstraten, Otto Klemperer and Howard Barlow. It is also planned to have Paul Whiteman direct the orchestra in a special symphonic-jazz concert.

The musicians will give the concerts on a co-operative basis, dividing the proceeds evenly among themselves.

2 Navy Fliers Die In Langley Crash

A naval aviation pilot and his mechanic, both of the Anacostia Naval Air Station, were killed late yesterday near Langley Field, Va., when their plane fell from a low altitude into Back River.

The victims were John Ware, machinist mate, first class, the pilot, and Edward L. Gosney, mechanic and machinist mate, third class. Ware's home was Hazard, Ky., and Gosney's Steubenville, Ohio.

According to authorities, the pair had taken off for a return flight to the air station at Anacostia, when the two-seated land scouting ship they were flying plunged into the river.

Both bodies were recovered by aviators at Langley Field. The plane, which turned on its back in the fall, was completely submerged. Officials could not immediately determine whether death came from the impact or from drowning.

One-Blonde Hoover Stampede Touches Off Frenzied Tribute

By Sidney Olson.
A Staff Correspondent.

Cleveland, June 10.—A brilliant blonde named "Queenie" forced the Republican Convention to adjourn in disorder here tonight.

When Herbert Hoover, damp and exhausted from exhorting his party for 45 minutes, left the platform to catch his train, "Queenie" seized an American flag from its standard and shouted, "We want Hoover!"

Over and over again she screamed the words "We want Hoover!" standing at the head of the main aisle of the auditorium, crammed with hysterical, yelling men and women.

She was hoisted to a chair, waving the flag high. Tirelessly, her eyes bright with frenzy, she waved and screamed.

Her single scream became a mass cry. The band began to play four notes of music. The delegates began to roar it. They had been thundering applause for the former President. They had kept on thundering it long after he had gone. That was the genuine Hoover ovation, even longer and noisier than the 14 minutes of frantic cheering he received when he first appeared.

The corn-yellow blonde persevered, somehow making her single efforts dominate the whole sea of bellowing faces. We asked her name.

"My name is Queenie Ethel," she screamed. "We want Hoover! My husband's a delegate from New York. We want Hoover! His name is Dr. Francis J. Clair. We want Hoover! I live in Washington. We want Hoover! At the Kennedy-Warren right now. We want Hoover!"

Former President Receives 45-Minute Ovation After Address.

dent. He remained less than five minutes, bowing his acknowledgment. Then he quickly left the hall, entered an automobile and sped to the Terminal Station, where he boarded a train for New York.

Snell Yelled Down.

Delegates and spectators yelled themselves hoarse, marched up and down aisles and then took up a chant led by a young blonde woman: "We want Hoover, we want Hoover." Chairman Snell advanced to the rostrum prepared to present to the convention Mrs. Benjamin Harrison, oldest living widow of a President. But the delegates howled him down whenever he asked for order.

The band struck up "Hail, Hail, the Gang's All Here" and the delegates joined in the singing—and it really was the first time during the convention that "the gang" was all there. The band switched to the "Battle Hymn of the Republic." Again the delegates started marching, waving their standards, as they bellowed forth "Glory Hallelujahs." Then came further yells of "We Want Hoover." Snell explained Hoover was on his train. But the delegates refused to listen, if they heard it. Finally 40 minutes after the demonstration started, Snell summarily adjourned the convention until tomorrow.

In the words of Lincoln, what Hoover said here tonight probably soon will be forgotten, but what he did here undoubtedly will never be forgotten as long as those present live. His speech was an appeal for a conservative course in national governmental affairs. Yet he warned against his party becoming reactionary. Its adherents must remain alive to the challenge of the times and ever remember that the last word in human progress had not been said.

Indicts New Deal.

He undertook to indict the New Deal either as a muddling inefficient hodge-podge or as a deliberate attempt to foist a despotism on the Nation based on European ideas of planned economy. Either indictment, he insisted, was sufficient for the rejection of the New Deal at the hands of the voters this November.

Receives Ovation.

Today probably was one of the happiest days in Hoover's life since he suffered defeat in 1932 at the hands of President Roosevelt. He received a resounding ovation on his arrival in Cleveland this morning, when approximately 5,000 persons jammed the terminal to welcome him here.

Mayor Harold H. Burton of Cleveland gave him an official welcome and Republican National Committee Chairman Henry P. Fletcher was on hand to receive him on behalf of the party and pin on his lapel an honor guest badge.

Accompanying the former President from Chicago was his son Allan. His confidential secretary, Lawrence Richey, met him here. Hoover went immediately to a suite reserved for him in the Hotel Cleveland, and there he stayed during the day.

A constant stream of Republicans formerly high in official life called to pay their respects. During the afternoon Hoover put the finishing touches on his speech, holding the final draft so late that, due to technical difficulties in mimeographing it, copies did not reach the press correspondents—aside from the press associations—until after the former President started speaking.

In order that his appearance before the convention might not be an anti-climax, Hoover, on advice of friends stayed out of sight of most of the delegates until he emerged in a din of wild cheering and yelling to the rostrum, escorted by Fletcher and convention Chairman Snell.

Cheers Deafening.

The cheering became deafening as Hoover, much grayer than when he left the White House, stood bowing before the convention, a grin on his face and waving his hand.

He wore a single-breasted Oxford gray suit, but had on the usual tall stiff collar.

It was the first time in two days that this Republican meeting really resembled a national political convention. Spectators and delegates alike joined in a din which bordered on pandemonium. Delegates tore up newspapers, casting the strips into the air. Men waved and threw their hats into the air and State standards were hoisted aloft. After 5 minutes of this tumultuous scene Snell started pounding his gavel for order. But it was in vain. His gavel beats could be heard only a few feet from the rostrum. The California delegates started a parade with a huge banner. Others joined in behind.

Richey, Hoover's secretary, standing a few feet back of his chief, could not keep back the tears of joy. He kept smilnig, but tears rolled down his face. In an effort to aid Snell in restoring order, Hoover stopped waving and smiling and stood silently by. But the delegates refused to be silenced. The band at the end of the hall blared and some delegations shook cow bells.

Snell smilingly gave up pounding his gavel and started shouting "Ladies and gentlemen of the convention" into the loud speakers. But the 14,000 cheering men and women only yelled back at him. Finally Hoover stepped up to the speakers' stand and adjusted the manuscript of his address. He started waving the convention into silence with both hands.

Gradually the cheering subsided, but the sergeant at arms had difficulty clearing the crowded aisles. Delegations found their way back to their places, yelling intermittently. Finally Snell, with a few quick strokes of his gavel, silenced the last applauders. Exactly 14 minutes had elapsed from the moment Hoover stepped on the platform to the moment he spoke.

He had been speaking only a few minutes when spectators in the rear of the hall started yelling "Louder, louder." Apparently, the amplifiers were not working again. Finally the cries of "louder" forced Hoover to halt. He consulted with Snell. But a moment later he went on. The amplifiers were installed by the WPA—if that is significant.

The former President went on, drawing loud laughter when he suggested that "the alumni of the New Deal who have graduated for conscience's sake or have graduated by request" dispute whether the New Deal is a meaningless hodge-podge or a mixture of European ideas.

Starting on his indictment of the New Deal, he drew applause when he asserted that "they drugged the thinking of the people with propaganda at the people's expense." But the first real shout came when he asserted that "the American people should thank Almighty God for the Constitution and the Supreme Court—they should be grateful to a courageous press."

Had it not been for the Supreme Court's decision, he asserted, this country would now be "a regimented people." He suggested that if re-elected, President Roosevelt might have an opportunity to appoint to the Supreme Court men in accord with his views.

He cited speeches of Tugwell, Wallace and Ickes as evidence that the New Dealers have given "little indications of repentance," and he inferred that if the President is re-elected he would continue to pursue the policies which are now under denunciation at this convention.

"No matter what the new platform of the New Deal party may say," asserted Hoover, "The philosophy of collectivism and that greed for power are in the blood of some part of these men. Do you believe that if re-elected they intend to stand still among the wreckage of their dreams? In the words of Mr. Hopkins, perhaps we are too profanely dumb to understand."

By this time the loud-speaking system difficulties had been overcome and the audience clearly indicated that it liked such sallies. Frequently he was interrupted by outbursts of applause, yells and laughter. Hoover cited the Supreme Court reversal of 10 or 12 New Deal major enactments, which he said had been "a violation of the rights of men and of self-government."

His audience, however, became more enthusiastic when he commenced his assault on Roosevelt spending, pointing a finger of scorn at "these gigantic expenditures and this torrent of waste," piling up "a national debt which two generations cannot pay." He recalled his advice to Congress in 1932 that "you cannot spend yourselves into prosperity." Now, he said, "billions have been spent to prime the economic pump," and he added "it did employ a horde of paid officials at the pump handle." He cited the taxes imposed by the New Deal and asserted that freedom of the average man "to work for himself is changed into a slavery of work for the follies of government."

Cites Inflation Peril.

"We have seen," he asserted, thumping the reading desk, "an explosive inflation of bank credits by this Government borrowing. We have seen varied steps toward currency inflation that have already enriched the speculator and deprived the poor. If this continues, the end is tears and anguish of universal bankruptcy and distress. No democracy in history has survived its final stages of inflation."

Hoover rapidly went on—as rapidly as the interruptions of applause would permit—to indict the New Deal for using the relief program to build up a political machine. He turned to its efforts to restrict production, declaring that "if we constantly decrease costs and prices and keep up earnings the production of plenty will be more and more widely distributed."

"Ride in Wilderness."

While the New Deal program of decreasing production and increasing prices may have been the means of taking "a few hundred thousand earnest party workers to the promised land," Hoover asserted, "it takes the rest of us for a ride in the wilderness of unemployment."

This brought a tremendous yell, followed by another a minute later when the former President added: "Can democracy stand the strain of Mother Hubbard economics for long?"

The former President cited the effects of price-fixing and restricted production on small business—that, he said, "is the soul of monopoly." He contended that such was embodied in New Deal measures from NRA, to the last tax bill.

"These are old tricks, no new disguise, which put shackles upon the freedom of men," he declared.

"In desperate jumping from one muddle to another we have seen repeated violation of morals and honor in government," he asserted, again causing a terrific shout. He cited repudiation of obligations, gold devaluation, flaunting of the Constitution and political coercion. "When the standards of honor and morals fail in government, they fail in people," he asserted.

Assails Class Hatred.

Hoover assailed the preaching of class hatred by the White House as "human poison more deadly than fear."

"Every reader of the history of democracy knows that is the final rock upon which all democracies have been wrecked," he asserted, and again the hall resounded with cheers.

The people now have the chance to demand whether after the election the President will press those measures which the Constitution forbids and to demand to know what the New Deal proposes to do about unstable currencies, unbalanced budgets, debts and taxes, he asserted.

He reminded the Republicans before him that they had the duty of determining the principles on which the party shall stand. The immediate task, he said, is to set the country "on the road of genuine recovery from the paths of instability." The day the Republican Party "can assure right principles, we can turn this Nation from demoralization of relief to the contentment of constructive jobs."

There alone, he said, was a guarantee of jobs for the 11,000,000 jobless, "based on realities and not on political claptrap." But, he added, the party which organized relief for the destitute "three years before the New Deal was born will not turn from those in need."

He assailed the New Deal for placing reform before recovery—but he held it had been a failure and the Republicans would have to undertake the task anew. He warned "that a new danger" is that "the swing from the foolishness of radicalism will carry us to the selfishness of reaction."

Wants Real Remedy.

The Republican Party must seek true social betterment, he continued, adding that measures producing confusion and disappointment must be avoided. Again the convention yelled approval when he said, "We must propose a real approach to social ills, not the prescription for them by quacks, of poison in place of remedy."

Uringing freedom in the economic field, the former President contended that the party must stand "against the greed for power of the wanton boys who waste the peoples savings, but it must be equally adamant against the greed for power and exploitation in the seekers of special privilege."

Urging his party to assume a liberal tinge, accepting the challenge of each day, Hoover contended that the last word in human accomplishment had not been spoken, nor the last step in human progress made. He said Republicans welcomed change—but added, amid applause, that "changes which destroys the safeguards of free men and women are only apples of Sodom."

He professed sympathy for those who reach honestly for short cuts to solve our pressing problems, but he declared that "while design of the structure of betterment for the common man must be inspired by the human heart, it can only be achieved by the intellect."

The gravest task before the party, he said, is to regenerate "these freedoms"—freedoms which have resulted in the great structure of human progress. Fundamental principles must be adhered to, principles ever true as are the laws of mathematics and gravitation and as the existence of God.

He demanded to know whether we shall keep the faith with those who established the liberties of the country. "Must we," he asked, "condemn the unborn generation to fight again and to die for the right of men to be free?"

"No, no!" came in a mighty shout from the delegates.

There are principles that cannot be compromised, he said, adding that either there will be a society based on "ordered liberty and the initiative of the individual" or a "planned society that means dictation, no matter what you call it or who does it." There can be "no halfway ground," he said.

Must Free Individual.

Government, he asserted, "either must release the power of the individual for honest achievement or the very forces it creates will drive it inexorably to lay its paralyzing hand more and more heavily upon individual effort." Twenty years ago, he said, "we accepted those ideals as the air we breathe."

But since America went to war and sacrificed her sons in defense of those ideals, "collectivism and its inevitable tyranny" has advanced throughout the world, he asserted, and now "in this thundering era of world crisis, distracted America stands confused and uncertain."

Now is not the time for compromise, he indicated, pointing out that the Whig Party "temporized, compromised on the issue of slavery for the black man"—and that party disappeared."

"It dserved to disappear, he then added, bringing the delegates to their feet with the added question:

"Shall th Republican deserve or receive any better fate if it compromises upon the issue of freedom for all men, white as well as black?"

He urged his party not to "blink the difficulties." Men had been led astray by siren voices, men who would "willingly exchange liberty for fancied security, even under dictatorship." They do not realize that "their only relief and hope of economic security can come only from the enterprise and initiative of free men."

"Let this convention decluare without shrinking that the source of economic prosperity is freedom," he asserted. "Man must be free to use his own powers in his own way."

He contended that "there is something vastly bigger than pay rolls, than economics, than materialism at issue in this campaign." Fundamental liberties are at stake, he asserted and demanded to know: "Is the Republican Party ready for the issue?" A loud shout of "yes, yes," went up.

"Are you willing to cast your all upon the issue, or would you falter and look back?" Hoover demanded to know.

"No, no!" screamed the delegates.

"Will you, for expediency's sake, also offer will-o'-the-wisps which beguile the people?"

"No, no!" came the shouts.

"Or have you determined to enter into a holy crusade for freedom which shall determine the future and the perpetuity of a nation of free men?"

"Yes, yes!" yelled the delegates, many of them standing.

For a minute the convention hall assumed the appearance of something sacred, like novices making their vows in a religious ceremony, or patriots pledging themselves to the republic.

"That star-shell fired by this convention over the no-man's land of world despair would illuminate the world with hope," commented Hoover after a pause.

He recalled the words of Lincoln, ending with the assertion that "the way is plain * * * a way which, if followed, the world will forever applaud."

"This," shouted Hoover, "is the call of Republicans and Americans alike: 'Stop the retreta. In the chaos of doubt, confusion and fear, yours is the task to command. Stop th e retreat and turn the eyes of your fellow Americans to the sunlight of freedom. Lead the attack to retake, recapture and reman the citadels of liberty.'"

"Thus only can America be saved," he asserted, and concluded with a wish that God's blessing might descend on all. Then the cheering started.

Politics and People

'Old Guard' Surrenders; the G. O. P. Passes Into New Hands From the West.

By Franklyn Waltman

CLEVELAND, June 10.—The turning point in this Republican Convention was reached today. Perhaps today may go down as the date of the turning point in this year's Presidential campaign. Certainly Republican enthusiasm and spirits could not reach a lower point than they have in recent weeks.

WALTMAN.

But so far as the Republican Party is concerned, it formally passed into new hands with a fresh leadership today. Actually the supporters of Gov. Alf M. Landon of Kansas have been in the saddle for the last week, but they have been unable to demonstrate their strength—and the last remnants of the "Old Guard" held out to the bitter end.

Unlike Napoleon's "Old Guard," this Republican group of impotent party leaders preferred to surrender rather than die. Some of their number, it is true, willingly laid down their political lives rather than accept this new movement from the West—such as Walter F. Brown, of Ohio, and former Senator David A. Reed, of Pennsylvania.

But those "Old Guard" Republicans who believe it is better to run and live to fight another day abandoned all opposition to the Kansan and his prairie cohorts. Charles Dewey Hilles, national committeeman from New York, having seen his last hopes crumble in the person of Senator Frederick Steiwer, leaped for the bandwagon at the eleventh hour and fiftieth minute. He publicly urged the New York delegation to support the Kansan and the result was that 85 out of the State's 90 votes will be cast for Gov. Landon.

For several weeks there have been substantial reasons for believing that events would shape themselves at this convention as they have. But uncertainties remained in the picture. In the first place, the "Old Guard," with the exception of J. Henry Roraback, of Connecticut, refused to budge.

It is now revealed that their last hope was Senator Steiwer. Apparently they never believed that Col. Frank Knox, Senator William E. Borah or even Senator Arthur H. Vandenberg could attain the nomination. But they encouraged these candidacies on the old political theory that as long as a man has hope he will be helpful.

Weeks ago they centered on Senator Steiwer as their great white hope in the "stop Landon" movement. This explains the action of the Republican arrangements committee, dominated by the "Old Guard," in selecting Senator Steiwer as the party keynoter last April. It was a selection engineered by Ralph E. Williams, National Committeeman from Oregon, one of the shrewdest of the "Old Guard."

Senator Steiwer was to be the ace in the hole for the "Old Guard." When other candidacies faltered, as they did early this week, the die-hard "Old Guard" hoped that Senator Steiwer in his keynote speech would sweep the Convention off its feet. Perhaps more painstaking effort was devoted to the Steiwer speech than any political address in a long time. The New Yorkers and the Pennsylvanians postponed their caucuses until today to await the results of the Steiwer performance.

But Senator Steiwer failed those who relied on him to stop the Kansas invasion. The text of his address was passable as a keynote speech. It contained punch lines which, if they had been properly delivered, should have brought the Convention screaming to its feet.

But the Oregonian was heavy-handed and thick-voiced in his delivery. Not only did he muff his opportunity by misplaced emphasis, but when the amplifying system broke down on him for a few minutes, he became unnerved and wandered in an embarrassed fashion around the rostrum. After that his audience lost interest in him.

Moreover, his address was devoid of anything which might be expected to stir the enthusiasm of the convention and cause them to rise up and say: "Here is the man." He scathingly flayed the New Deal, but he offered nothing constructive as an alternative program.

So the Steiwer boom really died in its birth. Mr. Hilles scented the reaction before he left the convention hall last night and today he jumped to the Landon band-wagon. So did two-thirds of the Pennsylvanians. But former Senator Reed, shorn of all power within his State, cast his vote for the Oregonian.

But the point of this piece was that the events just recited marked the ringing down of the curtain of the old Republican Party. Tomorrow the curtain rises on a new leadership when the Landonites lay before the convention their platform report and young John Hamilton, marches to the rostrum, to give to his party and his country for the Presidency, the name of Alfred Mossman Landon, of Kansas.

Young Hamilton, forthright and candid, devoid of any of the Machiavellian machinations of the Old Guard, can be expected to lead his party along new pathways. He is expected not only to infuse new life into the existing party machinery but to augment it by attracting into Republican ranks many youths now indifferent to politics. Win or lose next November, John Hamilton has become a major figure in American political life.

Press 'Hostile,' Orators Sought By Democrats

Fraley Requests Members of Congress to Assist in Speech Drive.

Because of the "bitter opposition" of the press, the Democratic National Committee has called on Capitol Hill supporters of the Administration to volunteer in an extensive speaking campaign for President Roosevelt's de-election.

In addition, the committee was reported "putting on the heat" in various quarters to stimulate "contributions" of $2.50 "or more" each in return for which copies of the Democratic convention book will be sent to contributors.

Postmaster General Farley, as chaiman is the National Committee, it was learned, has circularized members of Congress as to their availability for help in the speaking campaign. Personal letters from the Postmaster General are accompanied by mimeographed questionaires which are to be returned to the National Committee. The latter asks:

"To what places and sections do you prefer to go?"

"Is there any type of audience you prefer?"

Queries on Issues.

"Are there any special issues you will prefer to discuss?"

"Would you prefer invitations from any sources other than the Democratic National Committee?"

"Would you desire expense money?"

The letter says:

"You know as well as I the handicap of a bitter opposition press. To offset this the committee plans an extensive speaking campaign. I know you as a leader in the Administration can help us.

"So that the speakeds' bureau can develop its plans, could you let us know whenever your plans are fully made how much time you can give us, and what dates. As there are several questions I have in mind, I am enclosing a separate sheet for your reply.

"You know that the Administration and I will both appreciate what help you will give."

Lists of Constituents.

In the drive for contributions for the convention book, Democratic members of Congress have been asked fr lists of their constituents who might subscribe. If the lists are not forthcoming the members are reminded of the requests by a young woman employe of the committee.

At the sametime the campaign to obtain contributions from Government employes is being intensified. Telephone calls have followed up mail requests to Federal workers, and if these do not bring remittances the employes are receiving printed statements reading:

"As per our conversation over the phone in reference to Democratic Convention Book, $2.50, unless changed, your name will appear on the front of this volume as follows ——————."

"Note: As this amount is so small, won't you please attach check, money order or enclose cash and mail at once with any correction that may be necesary. Post will be paid by us."

Hoover Rings Bell On Applause Meter

Cleveland, June 10 (AP).—Herbert Hoover's entrance into the Republican National Convention tonight skyrocketed the indicator on the novel auditorium applause barometer to its maximum notch——100.

Electrically picking up the cheers of the 17,000 shouting, stamping and whistling spectators, the machine—which loks like a large thermometer—reacted immediately.

Bounding up to 80 as he walked down the platform to the speakers' stand, the bobbing indicator leaped to 90 at Hoover's first smile, and then mounted to its pinnacle.

For nearly ten minutes the light havered around the top.

During the speech, the indicator leaped upward many times. It popped into the 100 mark as he said: "The American people should thank Almighty God for the Constitution and the Supreme Court."

Prolonged cheering held the indicator as the maximum for about two minutes.

'Insular' Trend Of G.O.P. Finds Landonites Shy

dangerous agitators, the more undesirable because they "compete with the American workingman, increase the cost of our struggle against crime and add to our relief burden."

From this implicit attack upon foreigners as such, the keynoter swung into an indictment of academicians in politics, which must have taxed the indulgence of Republican brain-trusters, here in some numbers.

"Not content to employ professors and theorists as economic advisers," said Senator Steiwer, "the New Deal has placed the affairs of government in their hands. It depends on bookworms for practical experience and on hookworms for energy."

This labored sally, laboriously delivered, drew a few laughs from Mr. Steiwer's huge audience, but on the whole it was notable that the hyper-nationalistic line did not get across well, whether voiced by the Senator from Oregon, or by the less ponderous and heavy-handed Mr. Snell.

Cleveland Cool to Sally.

Of course, Cleveland is a cultured and sophisticated city, somewhat overburdened with convention oratory on the one hand and, on the other, keenly conscious of the importance of its overseas contacts. The reaction of a Cleveland audience is no criterion of the way voters farther west would regard appeals to provincialism. Nevertheless, it was noted by those assigned to observe the attitude of the balconies that there was not even a ripple of applause when Mr. Snell eloquently indicted "the bewildering jargon of a series of reciprocal tariff treaties recklessly throwing open the great American markets to the product of low-cost farms and factories in every foreign land."

The absence of commendation, for whatever it may be worth, was a subject of discussion this afternoon in the Landon camp, more interested in manifetsations of popular attitudes than it is in the slide of doubtful delegations toward the bandwagon of the Kansas Governor. It is natural that with the overthrow of the Eastern leadership there should be a tendency to emphasize the insularity, the isolation and the provincialism associated with the Middle West. The shift from high hat to homespun is bound to affect both the character of Republican campaign oratory and the composition of the Republican platform.

Opposed to Extremity.

But there is a disposition on the part of Landon supporters to keep this swing from becoming excessive. They wish to preserve the virtues of the old frontier psychology without succumbing to its crudities and intellectual deficiencies. It was, for instance, among Landon's supporters that one heard disparaging comparisons between Senator Steiwer's rabble-rousing theme and the simultaneous commencement address at Western Reserve University, given here last night by Rupert Hughes. The latter, while making a very thinly veiled attack on the Administration's policies, also took occasion to emphasize that "if the country is to be saved it must be done by a scholar."

Of the two attitudes, it is undoubtedly that of Mr. Hughes which conforms more closely to Gov. Landon's own attitude. But during the present curious intermediate period, with the old leadership cast off and the new one not yet established, strange oratorical outbursts and somewhat erratic divergencies in Republican attitudes are to be expected. Indeed, these divergencies may be found by critical observers in a single statement or speech. Mr. Snell, for instance, opened his address this morning by a reference to "the arrogant individualism of Franklin Delano Roosevelt." He closed it with a condemnation of "the President's personal affection for a government-dictated collectivist order."

With an effort that inconsistency could probably be reconciled, and with an effort which in this case is being heroically made, the various stresses and strains within the now amorphous Republican Party can doubtless be harmonized. During the prenomination stage of the convention the necessity for unity is developing unaccustomed bedfellows and some almost excessive patience with individual idiosyncrasies, of which Senator Borah has been the most determined and recalcitrant exponent.

But that confusing phase of the campaign is passing. Uncertainty, and the crude eloquence which often veils uncertainty, were inevitable attributes of the internal revolution—for it is no less—which the G. O. P. is experiencing. The form in which policy stabilizes, after the revolution is consummated, is what now most interests observers here.

Liberty League, Deficits Foe, Sinks Into the 'Red' $59,000

Report to House Clerk Shows Group's Expenses This Year Exceed Receipts; Heavy Borrowings Are Revealed.

The American Liberty League, militant foe of deficits, spent more money in the last three months than it collected, a report filed yesterday with the Clerk of the House of Representatives revealed.

Data submitted by League Comptroller Robert J. Dillon, in keeping with the provisions of the corrupt practices act, disclosed contributions from March 1 through May 31 totaling $124,247.50, while expenses for the same period were listed at $156,901.36, resulting in a deficit of $32,653.26.

Expenses for the entire first five months of the year from January 1 until June 1 were $265,286.27, while receipts were $206,476.80.

Contributors to the Liberty League during the second quarter of the year also were listed in the report.

Following were among the contributors:

Henry B. duPont, $5,000 loan; Lamont duPont, $5,000 loan; Pierre S. duPont, $5,300 loan; S Hallock duPont, $5,000 loan; William duPont, $5,000 loan. All of the above list their residence as Wilmington, Del.

Frank Jay Gould, New York, $100; Edward F. Hutton, New York, $10,000 loan; William S. Knudson, Detroit, $5,000; J. Howard Pew, Philadelphia, $10,000 loan; John L. Pratt, $5,000 loan; John J. Raskob, New York, $5,000 loan;.

Landon to Get 85 N. Y. Votes; Sure of Victory

don campaign manager, said there was no doubt of nomination on the first ballot. Previously his claims had been much more conservative than independent polls seemed to justify. For instance, he had been claiming only 41 or 42 votes from New York.

Told of the New York action, Hamilton smiled broadly.

"I don't think any comment is necessary," he said.

"Gov. Landon," he added, "will have a substantial number of votes from every State except those with instructed delegations and those with favorite sons. I can't conceive of anything stopping Landon on the first ballot."

Hamilton said he was not ready to discuss the Vice Presidency, but he added that after the nomination "we will be ready, but only to the extent of the Kansas delegation," to say something about it.

While there was little doubt of Landon's nomination at any time, the Pennsylvania and New York delegations were being watched anxiously. A break by one or both of them to some other candidate might have meant trouble.

The Pennsylvania delegates met early in the day in a closed session. Fifty votes were cast for Landon. Others were scattered as follows: Borah, 3; Knox, 3; Steiwer, 4; Dickinson, 3. It was indicated that eight of the 14 Borah votes would go to Landon on the second ballot, should there be a second.

Following the caucus it was reported that former Senator Reed had favored Steiwer and that Senator Davis had cast his ballot for Borah.

Possibility that some of the active candidates might withdraw appeared with the clinching of the Landon nomination. There was no immediate indication, however, of any such action. The active candidates besides Landon are Col. Frank Knox, of Chicago; Senator Borah and Senator Dickinson, of Iowa. In addition there are such favorite-son candidates as Robert Taft, of Ohio; Gov. Nice of Maryland and Senator Vandenberg, of Michigan.

Reilly Fails to Press Haupmann Fee Fight

New York, June 10 (AP).—Surrogate Albert Henderson, in Bronx Surrogates' Court, today marked off the calendar a show cause order and petition which Edward J. Reilly, lawyer, obtained to compel Mrs. Anna Hauptmann to file the will of her husband, Bruno Richard Hauptmann, and to state why Reilly should not be named administrator of the estate.

Hauptmann was electrocuted April 3 for the kidnap-murder of the Lindbergh baby. Reilly started the action in an effort to force payment of a fee he claimed was due him for defending Hauptmann at Flemington, N. J. The surrogate marked off the order and petition when neither party appeared.

Hoover Compares New Deal 'Progress' With March of European Dictatorships

Former President Warns Rally Of Threat to Nation's Freedom

Safety Lies in Supreme Court and Adherence to Constitution, Cleveland Delegates Told as Need for New Administration Is Cited.

Cleveland, June 10 (A).—The text of former President Herbert Hoover's address to the Republican National Convention follows:

In this room rests the greatest responsibility that has come to a body of Americans in three generations. In the lesser sense this is a convention of a great political party. But in the larger sense it is a convention of Americans to determine the fate of those ideals for which this Nation was founded. That far transcends all partisanship.

There are elemental currents which make or break the fate of nations. There is a moral purpose in the universe. Those forces which affect the vitality and the soul of a people will control its destinies. The sum of years of public service in these currents is the overwhelming conviction of their transcendent importance over the more transitory even though difficult issues of national life.

I have given about four years to research into the New Deal, trying to determine what its ultimate objectives were, what sort of a system it is imposing on this country.

To some people it appears to be a strange interlude in American history in that it has no philosophy, that it is sheer opportunism, that it is a muddle of a spoils system, of emotional economics, of reckless adventure, of unctuous claims to a monopoly of human sympathy, of greed for power, of a desire for popular acclaim and an aspiration to make the front pages of the newspapers. That is the most charitable view.

Cold-Blooded Attempt.

To other people it appears to be a cold-blooded attempt by starry-eyed boys to infect the American people by a mixture of European ideas, flavored with our native predilection to get something for nothing.

You can choose either one you like best. But the first is the road of chaos which leads to the second. Both of these roads lead over the same grim precipice that is the crippling and possibly the destruction of the freedom of men.

Which of these interpretations is accurate is even disputed by the alumni of the New Deal who have graduated for conscience's sake or have graduated by request.

In Central Europe the march of Socialist or Fascist dictatorships and their destruction of liberty did not set out with guns and armies. Dictators began their ascent to the seats of power through the elections provided by liberal institutions. Their weapons were promise and hate. They offered the mirage of Utopia to those in distress. They flung the poison of class hatred. They may not have maimed the bodies of men, but they maimed their souls.

The 1932 campaign was a pretty good imitation of this first stage of European tactics. You may recall the promises of the abundant life, the propaganda of hate.

Debate Suppressed.

Once seated in office the first demand of these European depotisms was for power and "action." Legislatures were told they "must" delegate their authorities. Their free debate was suppressed. The powers demanded are always the same pattern. They all adopt planned economy. They regimented industry and agriculture. They put the Government into business. They engaged in gigantic Government expenditures. They created vast organizations of spoils henchmen and subsidized dependents. They corrupted currency and credit. They drugged the thinking of the people with propaganda at the people's expense.

If there are any items in this stage in the march of European collectivism that the New Deal has not imitated it must have been an oversight.

But at this point this parallel with Europe halts—at least for the present. The American people should thank Almighty God for the Constitution and the Supreme Court. They should be grateful to a courageous press.

You might contemplate what would have happened if Mr. Roosevelt could have appointed enough Supreme Court justices in the first year of his Administration. Suppose these New Deal acts had remained upon the statute books. We would have been a regimented people. Have you any assurance that he will not have the appointments if he is re-elected?

of honor and morals fail in government they fail in the people.

There are some moral laws written in a great book. Over all there is the gospel of brotherhood. For the first time in the history of America we have heard the gospel of class hatred preached from the White House. That is human poison far more deadly than fear. Every reader of the history of democracy knows that is the final rock upon which all democracies have been wrecked.

There is the suggestion in the gospels that it is the meek who will inherit the earth. The New Deal will have little inheritance. There are recommendations as to righteousness for righteousness' sake only. I will not elaborate that.

If all this is the theory and practice of muddle, where has it brought us, even now? We have spent $15,000,000,000 more than the last Republican Administration. We have a debt $10,000,000,000 greater than even the Great War debt. After three years we still have the same number of unemployed that we had at the election of November, 1932. These actions are bringing injury to the well-being of people it purports to serve. It has produced gross reactionaryism in the guise of liberalism. And above all the New Deal has brought that which George Washington called "alterations which may impair the energy of the system and thus overthrow that which can not be directly overthown."

Republicans! After 150 years, we have arrived at that hour.

Here, where the tablets of human freedom were first handed down, their sacred word has been flouted. Today the stern task is before the Republican Party to restore the Ark of that Covenant to the Temple in Washington.

The New Deal may be a revolutionary design to replace the American system with despotism. It may be the dream stuff of a false liberalism. It may be the valor of muddle. Their relationship to each other, however, is exactly the sistership of the witches who brewed the cauldron of powerful trouble for Macbeth. Their product is the poisoning of Americanism.

The President has constantly reiterated that he will not retreat. For months, to be sure, there has been a strange quiet. Just as the last campaign was fought on promises that have been broken, so apparently this campaign is to be slipped through by evasion.

But the American people have the right to know now, while they still have power to act. What is going to be done after election with these measures which the Constitution forbids and the people by their votes have never authorized? What do the New Dealers propose to do with these instable currencies, unbalanced budgets, debts and taxes? Fifty words would make it clear. Surely the propaganda agencies which emit half a million words a day could find room for these 50. I noticed they recently spent 300 words on how to choose a hat. It is slightly more important to know the fate of a nation.

You have the duty to determine the principles upon which the Republican Party will stand. You make the laws of the party. Whether it is within the party or a government, our system is a government of laws and not of men. This party holds its promises.

The immediate task is to set the country on the road of genuine recovery from the paths of instability. We have enough inventions and enough accumulated needs to start the physical rebuilding of America. The day the Republican Party can assure right principles we can turn this Nation from the demoralization of relief to the contentment of constructive jobs. Herein—and herein alone—is a guarantee of jobs for the 11,000,000 idle based upon realities and not on political claptrap. In the meantime the party which organized efficient relief of the unemployed three years before the New Deal was born will not turn from those in need. That support to distress comes from the conscience and sympathy of a people, not from the New Deal.

Pledge Broken By Roosevelt, Snell Charges

Cleveland, June 10.—Swinging freely at the Roosevelt Administration, Bertrand H. Snell, of New York, minority leader in the House and permanent chairman of the Republican National Convention, called upon his party today to end the "grotesque failures" and the "planned extravagance" of the New Deal.

Snell succeeded momentarily in arousing a lethargic convention when he declared that President Roosevelt had disregarded his oath to uphold the Constitution and added:

"Thank God, no Republican President has ever so violated his Constitutional oath by calling upon the members of his party in Congress to violate theirs."

Snell had not finished the sentence before the delegates were on their feet cheering. His reference was to the President's request that Congress enact the Guffey coal act regardless of doubts of its constitutionality.

Resume Boredom.

The response was the nearest approach to a real demonstration that the convention has seen, but it was soon over and the delegates resumed the attitude of boredom that has thus far marked this meeting.

Snells speech was a direct and detailed attack upon President Roosevelt. In it, as did Senator Steiwer, of Oregon, in his keynote speech last night, he stressed the contention that the New Deal has imported to America an alien form of government. Snell quoted freely from the 1932 Democratic platform and from President Roosevelt's campaign speeches and charged promises had been broken.

The permanent chairman was escorted to the platform by former Vice President Charles G. Dawes, who gave him a one-sentence introduction.

"This year the Republican Party is not contending against the Democratic Party as such," Snell told the convention. "It offers to lead America against the unconstitutional dictatorship—yes, the arrogant individualism of Franklin Delano Roosevelt."

He declared that for three years America has "floundered in the grotesque failures of the New Deal," and has been suffering from its "alien political philosophies."

Snell appealed not only to Republicans, but also to "constitutional Democrats." He appealed to the youth of the country and to the women. To the youth he said that the Republican Party would give them jobs, not doles. To the women he appealed for support in establishing "sound, honest government."

Reviews Promises.

Then Snell swung into his accusations of broken promises. He reviewed the promises of the 1932 Democratic platform, pledging economy, sound currency, enforcement of the antitrust laws and removal of the Government from private enterprise and condemning restriction of agricultural production and the improper and excessive use of money in political activities.

All of these promises, Snell said, have been broken. He said Federal spending is almost double the 1932 rate, and added:

"Never, for so long as a single week since March, 1933, have the American people been out of the shadow of cataclysmic inflation."

He called the New Deal "the most gigantic Treasury financed political machine in the history of our Republic."

Next Generation Will Pay Price Of New Deal Era, Snell Asserts

Chairman Tells Convention 'Greedy Partisanship Has Debauched' Institutions of Government; Cites Constitution Oath of Roosevelt.

By the Associated Press.

Cleveland, June 10.—Following is the text of the speech Representative Bertrand H. Snell, of New York, delivered today as permanent chairman of the Republican National Convention:

This convention will nominate a man to lead a new crusade—a crusade to restore to the American people their Constitution and their liberties.

This is not a merely partisan convention. The people are weary of too much partisanship. They call for those who believe alike to stand together.

Let us here resolve to sink all differences, reconcile all opinions, moderate all ambitions and unite all energies in the supreme task of restoring the Government to the people. This year the Republican Party is not contending against the Democratic Party as such. It offers to lead America against the unconstitutional dictatorship—yes, the arrogant individualism of Franklin Delano Roosevelt.

Deceived and bewildered, the masses look to us for an honest answer to the question: "Can we be sure that we will be safer, happier—by returning the Republican Party to power?" If we give them the bread of sincerity and truth, they will reward us with their trust. If we give them the dead stone of meaningless political phrases and empty promises, they will abandon us to defeat. They call on us to turn our backs on the past and to lead them to a better future. Republicans, we will win in November, if we prove to them that we deserve to win.

For nearly four years America has floundered in the grotesque failures of the New Deal.

The institutions of our Government have been debauched by a greedy partisanship.

The living ideals of America, sanctified by the blood of patriots and hallowed by the allegiance of generations, have been purposely warped and molded to the spirit and form of alien political philosophies—philosophies fundamentally in conflict with the aspirations of this Nation and destructive of the very principles of freedom under law.

Four years ago I said to this convention, "The Nation has been safe when the Republican Party has been in control of the Government. It has never been safe when Republicans were not on guard."

And, oh! how the last four years have driven home that truth to a dismayed people.

In these four years every home has felt the heavy burden of the New Deal's planned extravagance.

Every cent of additional taxes serves but to increase the reckless power of the New Deal spoilers and wasters.

Every dollar added to our national debt is a new burden upon the back of youth.

Already the New Deal has cost us the progress and prosperity of a generation.

Let us here begin our march to sanity and to safety.

When the victory is won we shall give America a Government high above the plane of party politics. Let us make that ringing declaration at the very outset.

We shall need in executive positions the services of constitutional Democrats and Republicans alike.

Youth Is Needed.

We shall need especially the energy and the idealism of youth.

Youth—the clear-eyed eager young men and women of America—is there any thoughtful person within the sound of my voice whose heart does not go out to them?

Where is their hope?

To what can they look forward?

The reply comes from the gloomy sepulchre of New Dealism—from the head of its National Youth Administration, Mr. Aubrey Williams. I quote:

"We know that a vast, overwhelming majority of the children born in the last 25 years will not rise above a hand-to-mouth existence! that all their steps, from the cradle to the grave, will be dogged by poverty, sickness and insecurity—professional and intellectual honesty demand that you tell your pupils that 70 per cent of our people must live below the standard of decency—that millions now unemployed will never find jobs again."

Thus, by the New Deal's own admission, its entrenchment in office means the end of youth's opportunity in America.

With all the power of a burning conviction, we disavow that shameful counsel of defeat.

To youth in the cities and towns we say:

"You shall have jobs instead of the dole. For we shall not harass industry. We shall encourage industry to plan and expand in order that it may create more jobs, and produce more wealth so that there may be more to be distributed."

To the youth on the farms we say:

"You shall have a balance between the price of goods you sell and the price of the goods you buy. But there will be no swarm of meddlers to boss you around and tell you how to run your business."

"No Crushing Burden."

To all youth we say:

"You shall not have laid upon your shoulders a crushing burden of taxation. You shall not see your savings and your life insurance policies made worthless by mounting Government deficits and the destruction of Government credit, as happened in post-war Germany. You shall not have the heavy hand of dictatorship laid upon your schools, your churches and your homes. Religious and racial minorities shall be safe in the shelter of an unweakened Constitution."

"Come forth from the sepulchre of defeat and the dole. This way lies life and hope and opportunity!"

To the women of America, we speak with a special earnestness. You, even better than men, feel the remorseless pinch of rising living costs. To you we pledge ourselves against a continuation of the fantastic New Deal theory that the more you are forced to pay the more you will be able to buy. But our ultimate appeal to women is upon far higher ground. Woman, as the protector of the home and the defender of childhood, is forever the Nation's first champion of sound and honest government. We enlist the cooperation of American womanhood in instilling in our children the very foundation and cornerstone upon which rests the security of civilization—the sacredness of a promise.

How shall you teach your children—at home, at school, in the church—that a promise is an inviolable thing, when the Government of the United States and its Chief Executive treat their solemn pledges as mere scraps of paper?

Cites "Breach."

Standing on the steps of the Capitol, on March 4, 1933, Franklin Delano Roosevelt laid his hand on the Holy Scriptures and, within the hearing of all America, repeated after the chief justice:

"I, Franklin Delano Roosevelt, do solemnly swear that I will faithfully execute the office of President of the United States, and will, to the best of my ability, preserve, protect and defend the Constitution of the United States, so help me God."

Two years went by. On July 5, 1935, writing to Samuel B. Hill, of the House Ways and Means Committee to force the passage of a New Deal bill, President Franklin Delano Roosevelt said:

"I hope your committee will not permit doubt as to constitutionality, however reasonable, to block the suggested legislation."

The Republican Party, like every other party, is made up of fallible human beings. It has made mistakes; it is not without blame. But thank God no Republican President has ever so violated his constitutional oath by calling upon the members of his party in Congress to violate theirs! This is not a partisan issue; it is a moral issue. We do not denounce it as Republicans, but as Americans we bow our heads in shame and sorrow.

I wish this speech of mine to be free of traditional political denunciation, but it is the duty of the party in opposition to report to the people on how the party in power has conducted their Government. I shall make no charges, manufacture no maledictions. Out of their own mouths comes their condemnation.

Here are the promises—from the Democratic platform:

"We advocate an immediate and drastic reduction in Government expenditures by abolishing useless commissions and offices, consolidating departments and bureaus and eliminating extravagances to accomplish a saving of not less than 25 per cent in the cost of Federal Government . . ."

"We favor maintenance of the national credit by a Federal budget annually balanced on the basis of accurate executive estimates within revenues . . ."

Other Pledges.

"We advocate a sound currency to be preserved at all hazards."

"We advocate a competitive tariff for revenue, with a fact-finding commission free from executive interference."

We advocate strengthening and impartial enforcement of antitrust laws . . ."

". . . An international economic conference designed to restore international trade and facilitate exchange."

In that same platform, the Democratic Party demanded:

". . . The removal of Government from all fields of private enterprise . . ."

"We condemn . . . the unsound policy of restricting agricultural products to the demands of domestic markets."

"We condemn the improper and excessive use of money in political activities."

Finally, that entire platform was sealed with the solemn pledge:

"We believe that a party platform is a covenant with the people to be faithfully kept by the party when entrusted with power . . ."

You will recall that Candidate Roosevelt flew to Chicago to accept that platform 100 per cent.

But, in fulfillment of all those solemn pledges we find today Federal spending at almost double the 1932 rate.

In fulfillment of the pledge of sound currency, it has been made today a criminal offense for any citizen of the United States to be in possession of monetary gold. Under the New Deal, every session of Congress has had before it—and has approved in one or both Houses in one form or another—a Democratic printing-press money bill. And never, for so long as one single week since March, 1933, have the American people been out of the shadow of a cataclysmic inflation!

Assails Treaties.

Instead of a competitive tariff, we have the bewildering jargon of a series of reciprocal treaties recklessly throwing open the great American market to the products of low-cost farms and factories in every foreign land.

Instead of restored international trade and stable exchange, we see foreign trade gasping as the gallows—victim of a reciprocal economic lynching—and world ex-

Officials of the Administration Act With President's Approval, He Says

The succeeding stages of violence and outrage by which European despotisms have crushed all liberalism and all freedom have filled our headlines for years.

But what comes next in the United States? Have the New Dealers dropped their ideas of centralization of Government? Have they abandoned the notion of regimenting the people into a planned economy? Has that greed for power become cooled by the resistance of a people with a heritage of liberty? Will they resume if they are re-elected?

When we examine the speechs of Tugwell, Wallace, Ickes and others, we see little indications of repentance.

Let me say this: America is no monarchy where the chief of state is not responsible for his ministers. It has been traditional in our Government since the beginning that the important officials appointed by the President speak in tune with his mind. That is imperative if there is to be intellectual honesty in government. President Roosevelt finds no difficulty in disciplining his officials. Witness the prompt dismissal of those who did not publicly agree with him. The President will not discharge these men on whom his New Deal is dependent. No matter what the new platform of the New Deal Party may say, the philosophy of collectivism and that greed for power are in the blood of some part of these men. Do you believe that if re-elected they intend to stand still among the wreckage of their dreams? In the words or Mr. Hopkins, perhaps we are too profanely dumb to understand.

So much for the evidence that the New Deal is a definite attempt to replace the American system of freedom with some sort of European-planned existence. But let us assume that the explanation is simply hit-and-run opportunism, spoils system, and muddle.

We can well take a moment to explore the prospects of American ideals of liberty and self-government under that philosophy. We may take only seven short examples:

The Supreme Court has reversed some 10 or 12 of the New Deal major enactments. Many of these acts were a violation of the rights of men and of self-government. Despite the sworn duty of the Executive and Congress to defend these rights they have sought to take them into their own hands. That is an attack on the foundations of freedom.

More than this, the independence of the Congress, the Supreme Court and the Executive are pillars at the door of liberty. For three years the word "must" has invaded the independence of Congress. And the Congress has abandoned its responsibility to check even the expenditures of money. They have turned open appropriations into personal power. These are destructions of the very safeguards of free people.

We have seen these gigantic expenditures and this torrent of waste pile up a national debt which two generations cannot repay. One time I told a Democratic Congress that "you cannot spend yourselves into prosperity." You recall that advice did not take then. It hasn't taken yet. Billions have been spent to prime the economic pump. It did employ a horde of paid officials upon the pump handle. We have seen the frantic attempts to find new taxes on the rich. Yet three-quarters of the bill will be sent to the average man and the poor. He and his wife and his grandchildren will be giving a quarter of all their working days to pay taxes. Freedom to work for himself is changed into a slavery of work for the follies of government.

'No Democracy Ever Has Survived Final Stages of Explosive Inflation'

We have seen an explosive inflation of bank credits by this Government borrowing. We have seen varied steps toward currency inflation that have already enriched the speculator and deprived the poor. If this is to continue, the end result is the tears and anguish of universal bankruptcy and distress. No democracy in history has survived its final stages.

We have seen the building up of a horde of political officials. We have seen the pressures upon the helpless and destitute to trade political support for relief. Both are a pollution of the very fountains of liberty.

We have seen the most elemental violation of economic law and experience. The New Deal forgets it is solely by production of more goods and more varieties of goods and services that we advance the living and security of men. If we constantly decrease costs and prices and keep up earnings the production of plenty will be more and more widely distributed. These laws may be re-stitched in new phrases so that they are the very shoes of human progress. We had so triumphed in this long climb of mankind toward plenty that we had reached Mount Pisgah, where we looked over the promised land of abolished poverty. Then men began to quarrel over the division of the goods. The depression produced by war destruction temporarily checked our march toward the promised land.

Then came the little prophets of the New Deal. They announce the striking solution that the way out is to produce less and to increase prices so the people can buy less. They have kept on providing some new restriction or burden or fright down to a week ago.

At least it has enabled the New Deal to take a few hundred thousand earnest party workers to the promised land. It takes the rest of us for a ride into the wilderness of unemployment.

Can democracy stand the strain of Mother Hubbard economics for long?

"Soul of Monopoly."

Any examination of the economic muddle of the past three years shows the constant thread of price fixing, restriction of production and drive against small business. That is the soul of monopoly. That has maintained from the NRA to the last tax bill. These are old tricks, not new disguises, which put shackles upon the freedom of men.

In desperate jumping from one muddle to another we have seen repeated violation of morals and honor in government. Do I need recall the repudiation of obligations, the clipping of the coin, the violation of trust to guard the Constitution and the coercion of the voter? When the standards

Recalls Statement Four Years Ago On Republicans' Task of Reforms

Four years ago I stated that the Republican Party must undertake progressive reforms from evils exposed by the boom and depression. But I stated our first job was to restore men to work. The New Deal has attempted many reforms. They have delayed recovery. Parts of them are good. Some have failed. Some are tainted with collectivist ideas. That task must be undertaken anew by the Republican Party.

A new danger is created to the Republic in that the swing from the foolishness of radicalism will carry us to the selfishness of reaction.

The Republican Party must achieve true social betterment. But we must produce measures that will not work confusion and disappointment. We must propose a real approach to social ills, not the prescription for them, by quacks, of poison in place of remedy.

We must achieve freedom in the economic field. We have grave problems in relation of Government to agriculture and business. Monopoly is only one of them. The Republican Party is against the greed for power of the wanton boys who waste the people's savings. But is must be equally adamant against the greed for power and exploitation in the seekers of special privilege. At one time I said: "We can no more have economic power without checks and balances than we can have political power without checks and balances. Either one leads to tyranny."

The Republican Party must be a party that accepts the challenge of each new day. The last word in human accomplishment has not been spoken. The last step in human progress has not been made. We welcome change when it will produce a fairer, more just and satisfying civilization. But change which destroys the safeguards of free men and women are only apples of Sodom.

Great calamities have come to the whole world. These forces have reached into every calling and every cottage. They have brought tragedy and suffering to millions of firesides. I have great smypathy for those who honestly reach for short cuts to the immensity of our problems. While design of the structure of betterment for the common man must be inspired by the human heart, it can only be achieved by the intellect. It can only be builded by using the mold of justice, by laying brick upon brick from the materials of scientific research; by the painstaking sifting of truth from the collection of fact and experience. Any other mold is distorted; any other bricks are without straw; any other foundations are sand. That great structure of human progress can be built only by free men and women.

The gravest task which confronts the party is to regenerate these freedoms.

There are principles which neither tricks of organization, nor the rigors of depression, nor the march of time, nor New Dealers, nor Socialists, nor Fascists can change. There are some principles which came into the universe along with the shooting stars of which worlds are made, and they have always been and ever will be true. Such are the laws of mathematics, the law of gravitation, the existence of God, and the ceaseless struggle of humankind to be free.

Throughout the centuries of history, man's vigil and his quest has been to be free. For this the best and bravest on earth have fought and died. To embody human liberty in workable government, America was born. Shall we keep that faith? Must we condemn the unborn generations to fight again and to die for the right to be free?

There are some principles that cannot be compromised. Either we shall have a society based upon ordered liberty and the initiative of the individual, or we shall have a planned society that means dictation no matter what you call it or who does it. There is no half-way ground. They cannot be mixed. Government must either release the powers of the individual for honest achievement or the very forces it creates will drive it inexorably to lay its paralyzing hand more and more heavily upon individual effort.

Less than 20 years ago we accepted those ideals as the air we breathed. We fought a great war for their protection. We took upon ourselves obligations of billions. We buried our sons in foreign soil. But in this score of years we have seen the advance of collectivism and its inevitable tyranny in more than half the civilized world. In this thundering era of world crisis distracted America stands confused and uncertain.

The Whig party temporized, compromised upon the issue of slavery for the black man. That party disappeared. It deserved to disappear. Shall the Republican party deserve or receive any better fate if it compromises upon the issue of freedom for all men, white as well as black?

You of this convention must make the answer.

Let us not blink at the difficulties. Throughout the land there are multitudes of people who have listened to the songs of sirens. Thousands of men, if put to the choice, would willingly exchange liberty for fancied security even under dictatorship. Under their distress they doubt the value of their own rights and liberties. They do not see the Constitution as a fortress for their deliverance. They have been led to believe that it is an iron cage against which the wings of idealism beats in vain.

They do not realize that their only relief and their hope of economic security can come only from the enterprise and initiative of free men.

Freedom Demanded.

Let this convention declare, without shrinking, the source of economic prosperity is freedom. Man must be free to use his own powers in his own way. Free to think, to speak, to worship. Free to plan his own life. Free to use his own initiative. Free to dare in his own adventure. It is the essence of true liberalism that these freedoms are limited by the rights of others.

'No Freedom From the Exploitation Of the Weak or From Bureaucracy'

Freedom both requires and makes increased responsibilities. There is no freedom from exploitation of the weak or from the dead hand of bureaucracy.

There's something vastly bigger than pay rolls, than economics, than materialism, at issue in this campaign. The free spirit of men is the source of self-respect, of sturdiness, of moral and spiritual progress. With the inspiration of freedom come fidelity to public trust, honor and morals in government. The social order does not rest upon orderly economic freedom alone. It rests even more upon the ideals and character of a people. Governments must express those ideals in frugality, in justice, in courage, in decency, and in regard for the less fortunate, and above all, in honor. Nations die when these weaken, no matter what their material prosperity.

Fundamental American liberties are at stake. Is the Republican Party ready for the issue? Are you willing to cast your all upon the issue, or would you falter and look back? Will you, for expediency's sake, also offer will-o'-the-wisps which beguile the people? Or have you determined to enter in a holy crusade for liberty which shall determine the future and the perpetuity of a Nation of free men? That star shell fired today over the no man's land of world despair would illuminate the world with hope.

In another great crisis in American history, that great Republican, Abraham Lincoln, said: "Fellow citizens, we cannot escape history. We . . . will be remembered in spite of ourselves. No personal significance or insignificance can spare one or another of us. The fiery trial through which we pass will light us down in honor or dishonor to the latest generation . . . We—even we here—hold the power and bear the responsibility. We shall nobly save or meanly lose the last best hope of earth . . . the way is plain . . . a way which if followed, the world will forever applaud."

Republicans and fellow Americans! This is your call. Stop the retreat. In the chaos of doubt, confusion and fear, yours is the task to command. Stop the retreat, and turning the eyes of your fellow Americans to the sunlight of freedom, lead the attack to retake, recapture and reman the citadels of liberty. Thus can America be preserved. Thus can the peace, plenty and security be re-established and expanded. Thus can the opportunity, the inheritance, and the spiritual future of your children be guaranteed. And thus you will win the gratitude of posterity, and the blessing of Almighty God.

Topeka Gets Set For Mammoth Demonstration

By the Associated Press.

Topeka, Kans., June 10.—Civic leaders and city officials, confident Gov. Alf M. Landon will be nominated for the Presidency by the Republican National Convention at Cleveland, today planned a tumultuous celebration when—and if—news of the nomination is received.

Mayor H. G. Barrett issued a proclamation calling on Topekans to join in a public ovation. Signal for the celebration will be a medley of whistles, bells, fire sirens, bombs and fireworks displays.

Robert M. Outhwaite, president of the Chamber of Commerce, and Holmes Meade, chairman of a committee on arrangements, announced the celebration would be held on the State House grounds if the nomination comes during business hours.

Should Landon be nominated at night, celebrants will assemble at the State House and march in a torchlight procession to the executive mansion.

Landon Asks Harmony.

Gov. Landon said he hoped there would be "harmonious agreement on a platform by the convention.

"I hope it will be a platform that I can enthusiastically support 100 per cent," he declared.

Landon indicated earlier in the day he would not go to Cleveland regardless of developments. Rejecting an invitation to fly there with Clarence D. Chamberlin, transatlantic flier, he explained:

"I told him I was glad of the opportunity to go with such a good pilot but that I was not going."

"Sit down," Landon said at the opening of the press conference. "This is as good a place to loaf as any."

He signed a stack of letters, papers and checks while talking.

Woodring a Caller.

Harry H. Woodring, former Democratic Governor and now Assistant Secretary of War, and his wife called upon Landon during the day.

"If we have to have a Republican President, I'm glad it's to be you. As a fellow Kansan, you have my best wishes up to and including the Cleveland convention," said Woodring.

"Thanks," the Governor replied. "I couldn't expect you to go further than that—as one good Governor to another."

When Woodring, defeated for reelection by Landon in 1932, said he had lost a bet of "60 dinners" that Landon would not be the Republican nominee, Landon laughed and promised "an invitation to dine at the White House if you lose your election bet."

Landon said he had a third engagement with his dentist tomorrow morning "that ought to finish the job." He went horseback riding at the Topeka Hunt Club late in the day.

Ickes Letter Gets Son Inspection Job in PWA

Medford, Mass., June 10 (AP).—The new inspection clerk on the $3,000,000 Aberjona sewer construc ion job, a Public Works Administration project, is Robert H. Ickes, son of Secretary of the Interior Ickes.

Ickes, who was graduated last Saturday from Lake Forest University, presented himself to PWA authorities Monday with a letter from his father, national PWA head, requesting that his son be given some hard work to do. J. Arthur Garrod, State engineer inspector for PWA, immediately assigned him to the Aberjona project in the inspection division, and he started work yesterday.

Landon Never Liked His Lickings Deferred

Cleveland, June 10 (AP).—John Landon, father of Gov. Alf M. Landon of Kansas, today said in an interview the man considered the leading contender for the Republican Presidential nomination frequently said as a boy:

"Do it now. Don't wait until tomorrow."

"That's what he would say when he was going to get a good licking," said the elder Landon. "That was because his mother used make it a practce to tell him the day ahead of time whenever he needed a licking. "Then she would tell me to give him one. I guess that he found the waiting for it worse than the licking itself."

The elder Landon confided, however, he could not remember "what he was going to get a licking for."

Caucus Today To Pledge 16 Maryland Votes

Will Go to Nice First, Then Landon, Perhaps on Initial Ballot.

By the Associated Press.

Cleveland, June 10.—Maryland's delegation to the Republican Convention will caucus tomorrow to decide which Presidential candidate will receive the State's 16 votes.

A spokesman predicted the votes would go to Gov. Landon on the second ballot, if not on the first. He said the votes would be cast first for Gov. Harry W. Nice as a favorite son but added if Landon were nominated on the first ballot, they would switch into the Landon column then.

The delegation is pledged to vote for Nice for President until released by him.

State Chairman William P. Lawson called the caucus only after practically every delegate had requested it.

Nice continued his campaign for second place on the ticket today. He said:

"Very, very many delegates have pledged their suuport to me for Vice President."

He declined, however, to estimate the support actually pledged to him. J. Cookman Boyd, long prominent in Maryland Republican circles and chairman of the recently abolished State survey commission, is to make the speech tomorrow nominating Nice for the Presidency. Nice at first announced his nephew, Deely K. Nice, would make the speech. Then he announced John Philip Hill, Baltimore candidate for Congress, would make it. Late today he announced Boyd would make it.

Maryland's delegates, as a general rule, were well pleased with their seats on the convention floor. They are less than 100 feet from the speaker's stand and the delegates are able to see well what goes on. The amplifying system enables the delegates to hear perfectly.

"And," one delegate observed about the seats, "they are near the door." That nearness saves much time. The large crowds at the hall make it necessary for persons desiring a quick lunch to get out as soon as the sessions end.

Two of the Maryland Republican candidates for Congress in the November election are here for the convention, even though they are not delegates. They are Harry W. Legore, Frederick, in the Sixth District, and Daniel Ellison, Baltimore, in the Fourth District. Each said he was here just to look on and to talk with all party leaders he could meet.

The delegates themselves were unanimous in predicting victories for Legore and Ellison. They also predicted victories for other Republican Congressional nominees in Maryland.

State Police Sergeant Menash Katz, who accompanied the Governor here, blossomed out in full regalia on opening day—badge, gun, Sam Browne belt, shiny cartridges and all. Katz wore plainclothes prior to that time and had a good answer for his sudden transfer to regimentals. "They have special parking places at the auditorium for Governors' cars and I was getting the run-around on the parking situation because they had no way of telling whose car I was driving, since it was not marked with State insignia," Katz said, "So, I put on the uniform."

ciated Departments of Play and Recreation for the District of Columbia" as the name for the agencies joined in the agreement, was stricken from the report.

The board made only minor changes and authorized Quinn to vote favorably for the program when he meets with the Commission.

Superintendent Ballou reported to the board a reply sent Frank J. Coleman, secretary of the Central Labor Union, answering the union's charge that Ballou was misinterpreting recent legislation placing vocational schools in Washington on the same status as junior high schools.

Explains Regulation.

The union said there was a "rumor" that the superintendent was attempting to keep the 86 teachers in the five vocational schools from being advanced to junior high salary schedule.

Ballou, in his reply, pointed out salary raises could go only to the vocational teachers who could meet "the qualifications of junior high school teachers." He said school officials have already begun a study of the educational qualifications and teaching service of the teachers affected, and a report will be made soon.

The superintendent announced eight teacher retirements to become effective at the close of the school year. The instructors are Miss S. A. Moore, teacher, Abbot Vocational School; Miss L. E. Mortimer, teacher, Powell Junior High; Miss J. E. Baker, teacher, Central High; Miss M. E. Rose, Mann; Miss E. A. Ossire, administrative principal, Curtis-Hyde; Miss E. L. Smith, teacher, Seaton; Miss A. M. Sisson, principal, Langley; Miss Sarah Musson, teacher, Langdon.

Among District delegates at the Cleveland convention are Miss Mildred Reeves, former secretary to Speaker Longworth, who yesterday made a futile appeal to the rules committee to increase the District delegation from three to six members, and James C. Wilkes (center). Edgar C. Snyder, former United States marshal for the District of Columbia (right) is among spectators at the convention.

Colladay Delegates Seated

day vetoed the plan, with a result that the District will continue to have three delegates. The Democrats of Washington will have six in Philadelphia.

The split in the Republican organization in the District really grew out of the fact that the city has only three delegates. Colladay wanted to come here not only as national committeeman, but also as a delegate. What is now called the Rover-Evans group wanted Joshua Evans, jr., the banker, as a delegate.

The Rover-Evans group decided to fight Colladay, and the factional split was the result.

Minority Report Filed.

The majority report of the committee on rules, as submitted to the national convention today, recommended that delegations from the District of Columbia, Hawaii and Alaska be increased from three to six.

The minority report, presented by Miss Jane Todd, of West Chester County, New York, demanded that the number remain at three.

Former Representative Carl G. Bachman, of West Virginia, who is Senator Borah's campaign manager here, said he saw "no real reason why we should put the District on the same basis as Arizona, New Mexico, Nevada and Wyoming." Each of these States has six delegates.

R. B. Creager, of Texas, supported Bachman. He said it was "illogical that dependencies which can cast no vote should have their representation increased." He said it would be "most unreasonable."

Samuel W. King, of Hawaii, pointed out that the islands have a population of 384,000.

"This," he said, "is a matter of greater importance to us than it is to you folks who can go home and vote. This is our only approach to national politics."

Miss Mildred Reeves, a belle on Capitol Hill a few years ago, when she was secretary to the late Speaker Nicholas Longworth, presented the case of the District of Columbia.

She pointed out that the District of Columbia now has a population of 594,000. She reminded the convention that the Republicans maintain a bureau for absentee voters, which frequently swings elections in the various States. And she told the delegates about the large sums of money that are contributed to the party by residents of the District.

When he convention voted on the question of increasing the number of District delegates from three to six, the "noes" were so vociferous that nobody bothered to ask for a roll call.

The committee on credentials decided in favor of the Colladay delegates and alternates at 5 a. m. today.

The whole contest revolved around Frencis Wells, colored, who for many years was a messenger in the District Building. Wells always has been a supporter of Colladay.

In the Republican primary, he ran as a candidate for delegate in the Fifteenth District, and as a Colladay man he was elected. He gave an address on Fourth street northwest.

Forty-three delegates were elected in the primary. These 43 were to elect 43 delegates-at-large, and the combined 86 were to constitute the convention committee, which was to elect three delegates and three alternates to the Cleveland convention.

The election of Wells gave Colladay a majority of one in the meeting of the 43 delegates elected in the primary.

A credentials committee favorable to Rover unseated Wells and seated a man favorable to the Rover cause. After this Colladay and his followers walked out and held a convention of their own.

The argument before the credentials committee this morning hinged on the Wells residence. Did he live at the Fourth street address, as the Colladay faction said, or did he live on Sherman avenue, as the Rover group insisted? William P. MacCracken made the argument on behalf of the Rover group. Joseph McGarraghy talked for the Colladay faction, yielding some of his time to Colladay.

The Colladay group retaliated with evidence to show that he lived on Fourth street.

"I have been in his bedroom," said Colladay. "I say on my word of honor that Francis Wells lives on Fourth street."

Said James Wilkes, a delegate on the Colladay slate:

"Those men over there (pointing to the Rover group) know that Francis Wells and his wife have not lived together for 10 years."

The vote in the credentials committee in favor of the Colladay group was better than 2 to 1.

Miss Reeves appeared late last night before the committee on resolutions to appeal for a plank in favor of national representation for the District of Columbia. Such a plank would advocate that the City of Washington be represented in the Senate and House.

The prospect is that the committee on resolutions will turn down the District plank this year.

2 Perish as Storm Sweeps Over South

Memphis, Tenn., June 10 (AP).—A wind, rain and dust storm swept over sections of west Tennessee, north Mississippi and east Arkansas early this afternoon, killing a mother and her child near Drummond, Tenn., and causing thousands of dollars of damage.

Mrs. John Cooper, wife of a farmer, was leading her 3-year-old son, Jimmy, from her home to a storm cellar in the home of her grandfather nearby when they were struck by lightning. Both were killed.

Sweeping over a wide area, the disturbance disrupted electric and communication lines, unroofed houses and blew down trees, but brought relief to sweltering residents and drought stricken crops.

Two hundred children escaped injury when the wind blew signboards into a swimming pool near here.

New York, June 10 (AP).—Samuel Goldwyn, film producer, left Doctors' Hospital today, where he had been under treatment for acute intestinal toxemia since April 14.

Steiwer Forgot Record on Hill, Says New Deal

Farley Lists Democratic Acts He Vows Keynoter Supported by Vote.

New Dealers yesterday criticized the Republican keynote speech of Senator Steiwer, of Oregon, with assertions that it did not square with his own Congressional record and failed to refer to that of the Hoover Administration.

In a statement, Chairman Farley, of the Democratic National Committee, said Steiwer voted for AAA, NRA, the 1933 banking act, TVA, CCC, farm bankruptcy act, housing act, municipal bankruptcy act and the national labor relations act. He added:

"If he believes what he told the Republican Convention, why did he and work and vote in the same way?"

Cummings Chuckles.

Expressing similar views, Chairman O'Connor (Democrat), of New York, of the House Rules Committee, said:

"It is a fair wager that while rehearsing his speech the Senator removed all the mirrors from his hotel suite.

At his press conference, Attorney General Cummings chuckled when the speech was mentioned, and commented.

"I thought as a foray in destructive criticism it was well done."

"One Great Vacuum."

In his statement, Farley said:

"There was one great vacuum in the keynote address. Not once in more than an hour did the speaker refer in any way to what happened during the last four years of Republican rule in the United States.

"The keynote orator made one pledge which he will no doubt regret. He said, 'What we have done, we will do.'

"The American people are not so foolish as to permit this. They managed to live through the Hoover-Republican regime which went out of office in 1933, and under the policies of the Roosevelt Administration they have achieved economic restoration. They will not sacrifice this in order to permit the Republicans to visit upon them again the terrible scourge inflicted by Herbert Hoover and the party of which he was the leader."

Four From Capital Hurt in Maryland

Four Washingtonians were injured last night near Hagerstown, Md., when their automobile was in collision with a truck near Sidling Hill Mountain.

The injured all were brought to Washington County Hospital, in Hagerstown. They were Mrs. Grace Carnaggio, 31; Frank Cifala, 28, and Mrs. Marie Cifala, all of No. 1 O street northwest, and Miss Pauline Puleo, 18, of 1525 North Capitol street.

Cifala was most seriously hurt, with possible internal injuries and severe cuts about his left eye, while Mrs. Cifala, his mother, suffered chest injuries and cuts. The others were cut and bruised.

Rankin Attacks O'Connor's Bid For Leadership

Mississippian Opens Fire When New Yorker Announces Candidacy.

Strife over the House Democratic leadership got under way yesterday when Representative John J. O'Connor (Democrat), of New York, acting leader and rules chairman, threw his hat into the ring as a candidate for the permanent job. The word of O'Connor's candidacy had scarcely gotten around when Representative John E. Rankin, long-time House member from Mississippi and himself a candidate for the place, opened fire on O'Connor and his "crowd."

Representative Carl Vinson (Democrat), of Georgia, posed the question of who shall lead the Democrats when he circulated an editorial from the Atlanta Constitution of June 6, in which the editor, Clark Howell, urged O'Connor's acceptance by the Democratic majority.

"For the South to attempt to preempt all the major posts in Congress would be unwise and impolitic," the editorial read. "Mr. O'Connor is at present chairman of the powerful Rules Committee and acting party leader. He is an upstanding and upright man and a stalwart in the party.

"It should not be argued against him that he is a member of Tammany because Tammany is needed by the Democratic Party.

"In the present Congress the South has been honored as never before since the '60s. Two of its Representatives have been Speakers and one the majority leader, and several are chairmen of important committees.

Parries Every Point.

"That other Southern Representatives should desire the post of majority leader is entirely understandable and proper. But that they should recognize the prior claim of Mr. O'Connor and refrain from any contest that might bring schism in the House is the duty they owe their party and their country."

Rankin parried every point made by the editor of the Constitution. He was particularly incensed over a statement that O'Connor had acted as leader last year during the illness of the then Majority Leader Bankhead, when Representative Edward T. Taylor, of Colorado, was the acting leader.

"Surely the Democrats of Georgia would not favor Mr. O'Connor if they knew the facts," Rankin declared. "The statement in the editorial to the effect that Mr. O'Connor acted as floor leader during the illness of Mr. Bankhead is entirely erroneous. That position was filled by Edward T. Taylor, of Colorado, and it is well known among members of the House that the O'Connor crowd were laying their plans to try to oust both Taylor and Bankhead at that time.

Termed Ridiculous.

"I am sure that neither Representative Vinson, of Georgia, nor Mr. Clark Howell, editor of the "Atlanta Constitution," speak for the Georgia delegation on the subject of floor leadership," Rankin continued.

"It is ridiculous to say that the leadership ought to go to New York because of prominent positions held in this Administration by other sections of the country, when New York has three members of the Cabinet, five of the leading chairmanships of the House, two in the Senate, and bureau heads almost without number, and if I might be pardoned for saying so, three of the nine members of the Supreme Court hail from that State."

The election of a new majority leader is not likely to come before the House until January, when the Seventy-fifth Congress convenes.

The vacancy occurred when former Majority Leader Bankhead was elevated to the Speakership after the death of Speaker Joseph W. Byrns.

Why every gin drink needs the Liqueur quality* of Gordon's Gin

When you order a gin drink at the bar—or mix one yourself at home—consider this fact: For 167 years—Gordon's has been the base around which many of the world's famous gin drinks have been created! The reason is—Gordon's has that important liqueur quality and higher proof—94.4, which means greater strength, sustained flavor. That is why drinks never taste thin with Gordon's Gin—and why Gordon's is the largest selling gin in the world.

WHY DRINKS NEVER TASTE THIN WITH GORDON'S GIN

AVAILABLE IN VARIOUS SIZES

LIQUEUR QUALITY*

Gordon's Gin is not, of course, a liqueur—it is not sweet—it is very dry. Gordon's attains liqueur quality through an exclusive formula—167 years old. Gordon's juniper berries are imported. Then aged over a period of years until ready to release their full, ripe, luscious flavor. Gordon's Gin is the heart of the distillate. It is crystal clear. Made with 100% grain neutral spirits. Its quality is tested every fifteen minutes. Thus with Gordon's Gin you get RICHER FLAVOR—VELVETY SMOOTHNESS—LIQUEUR QUALITY.

HIGHER PROOF—94.4

GREATER STRENGTH. Gordon's has found the higher proof, 94.4, to be the precise strength for perfect gin drinks. Gordon's pays a higher tax for this greater strength, but it means cocktails, rickeys, Tom Collins and other gin drinks that are always full-flavored! DRINKS NEVER TASTE THIN WITH GORDON'S GIN.

GOOD NEWS! GORDON'S GIN IS NOW MUCH LOWER IN PRICE!

100% NEUTRAL SPIRITS DISTILLED FROM GRAIN

Blonde Stirs Rally to Frenzy In Hoover Plea

D. C. Woman's Stirring Cry Forces Night Session to Quit in Disorder.

"Listen, Toots," he shouted, "we ain't getting nowhere with this. Let's parade down the aisles, hey."

"Okay," screamed Queenie.

Followed by seven persons they pushed off into the throng.

Their parade was lost until it suddenly merged with a real one, led by the California delegation, singing "We Want Hoover."

Fourteen State standards were in this parade, and some 200 delegates.

But in no time Queenie and Mr. Rosenberg were at the head of this parade, too. They brought it back before the platform and assembled their bellowing throng before the rostrum where Chairman Snell had vainly beaten for order for nearly an hour.

Waves Her Flag.

"Queenie," her arms steeled with strength for her hero, answered more questions, waving her flag:

"Hoover's for the Clair plan, we want Hoover! Our plan is to save the Constitution. So we want Hoover!"

Her white silk-crepe dress was smudged and torn, her yellow hair down in her face, her make-up streaming from her eyes and down her cheeks, but she wouldn't give up.

Again and again Snell, now pleading, now angry, now helplessly smiling, had implored order. By his side was a dignified old lady in a black and white figured-print silk dress, a diamond choker around her yet-firm throat, a white-gold lorgnette hanging to her waist.

This was Mrs. Benjamin Harrison, wife of a Republican President of the last century. For an hour she stood patiently waiting to be introduced to the convention. Misunderstanding, afraid Snell would adjourn the convention while they were still having their first good yell in four years, the Republicans wouldn't listen. At last, Snell introduced her anyway and escorted her off.

So the convention was adjourned in disorder. Queenie combed her hair and suddenly disappeared. Mr. Rosenberg's friends, proud of this man's feat, escorted him away for a celebration.

That is how the Republicans, long thwarted of a chance for enthusiasm, finally seized it, anyway, because Queenie wanted to wave the American Flag and save the Constitution.

For two days they didn't get an opportunity to make a demonstration that was worth taking. Keynoter Steiwer was dull last night. Chairman Snell was dull this morning.

And while Hoover couldn't always be heard in the galleries, especially at first, when his voice trembled and faded with nervousness, and he clenched his red hands tight in desperation at the cries of "louder"—he gave them their first chance to shout, and Queenie Ethel Clair clinched it.

Earlier we had met the most disappointed fellow in Cleveland. His name is Slogan Smythe, pronounced with a long "y."

New Epic Song.

Late tonight, just before the Hoover speech, the Republican National Committee released the new epic song, "Three Long Years," written to fulfill the delegates' demand for some battle song, to the tune of "Three Blind Mice." It follows:

Three long years.
Three long years.
Full of grief and tears, full of grief and tears.
Roosevelt gave us to understand
If we would lend a helping hand
He'd lead us all to the promised land
For three long years.
Three long years.
Three long years
Full of grief and tears,
Full of grief and tears,
For when we got to the promised land
We found it nothing but shifting sand,
And he left us stripped like Sally Rand
For three long years.
(Repeat "three long years," etc., then—)
He took our shoes and he took our coat.
He got our shirt and he got our goat,
He took us to sea and sank the boat
For three long years.
(Repeat "three long years," etc. then)
He fooled the farmer to get his vote
He wrote and spoke and spoke and wrote
But all we got was a phony note.
For three long years
(Repeat "three long years," etc. then)
With arrogant rule he has held full sway
And has stolen all of freedom away,
Taking everything we could pay
For three long years.
(Repeat "three long years," etc. then)
But the end has come to the evil day
For the Grand Old Party points the way
To a really prosperous U. S. A.
Through all the years.

Students to Present Group Recital Tonight

Florence Howard will present a group of students in a recital tonight. The program includes Mozart's "Alleluia" and the prayer scene from "Cavalleria Rusticana," sung by the Tuesday Evening Music Club.

Soloists on the program are Mary Elizabeth Pack, Frances Tucker, Eleanor Westergren, Alice Sherrer, Myrtle Barnes, Inez Crater, Gladys Wilcox, Elma Dotter and Ina Holzscheiter. The accompanists are Marjorie Davis and Margaret Tolson, who will also play two of Brahms' Hungarian dances.

Retired Enlisted Man Dismissed From Army

Felix N. Parsons, retired corporal, has been dismissed from the Army following a court-martial because of failure to pay his debts, the War Department announced yesterday.

Parsons, who lives in Atlanta, Ga., entered the Army service in December, 1917. He was retired August, 1934.

change of goods fallen into utter chaos.

In fulfillment of its pledge to strengthen and enforce the anti-trust laws, the New Deal, three months after inauguration, gave the world the bob-tailed Blue Eagle, with the outright suspension of all the anti-trust statutes!

In fulfillment of their pledge to limit Government competition in all fields of private enterprise, the New Deal pump-primers have flooded Treasury funds by the hundreds of millions into a whole alphabet of new enterprises directly in competition with private endeavor.

Their pledge against restricting agricultural production to the demands of the domestic market, the New Dealers honored with the fantastic and unconstitutional AAA—conceived as a policy of shameful destruction and dedicated to the proposition that the way to achieve the more abundant life is to plow under the land of plenty!

In fulfillment of its pledge against the excessive use of money in political activities, the New Deal has set up in Washington the most gigantic Treasury financed political machine in the history of our Republic.

With reckless abandon and cruel cynicism it has diverted relief funds to the advancement of its partisan cause—all for the perpetuation of the Roosevelt Administration.

Yes, broken promises are the very warp and woof of New Dealism.

Broken promises have all but disrupted the orderly processes of constitutional government, setting up in their stead a vast and burdensome bureaucracy, ruling by capricious and hysterical Executive orders!

Free competition has been throttled and honest enterprise intimidated. Thrift, frugality and industry have been mocked by reckless Government squandering of the taxpayers' hard-earned dollars. All the great primary driving forces of American life, all our deepest national impulses for prosperity and progress, have been sacrificed for the sentimental glamour of the bureaucratic boondoggle.

Cites Pittsburgh Talk.

Turn from the platform to the candidate. Here are the words of Candidate Roosevelt spoken at Pittsburgh, Pa., October 19, 1932:

"Taxes are paid in the sweat of every man who labors, because they are a burden on production and can be paid only by production."

And again in the same speech:

"Our workers may never see a tax bill, but they pay in deductions from wages, in increased cost of what they buy, or (as now) in broad cessation of employment."

Nor is that all. Candidate Roosevelt felt very keenly that Federal taxes under the Republican Administration were too high. Excessive taxes, he explained (and I quote his own words), "are reflected in idle factories, tax-sold farms, and, hence, in herds of hungry tramping the streets and seeking jobs in vain."

These solemn Democratic warnings were broadcast to tens of millions at a time when the expenditures of the Federal Government were running approximately $4,000,000,000 a year—and all under one budget!

Since the New Deal economizers took over the Treasury, Federal expenditures have averaged a little more than $7,500,000,000 a year—under two budgets!

Listen again to Candidate Roosevelt at Pittsburgh on the subject of deficits. He explained it all in language very simple and very, very clear—language that a child might understand. Again I quote a Pittsburgh promise:

"Now the credit of the family depends chiefly on whether that family is living within its income. And this is so of the Nation. If the Nation is living within its income, its credit is good.

"If, in some crisis, it lives beyond its income for a year or two it can usually borrow temporarily on reasonable terms.

"But, if, like a spendthrift, it throws descretion to the winds, is willing to make no sacrifice at all in the spending, extends its taxing to the limit of the people's power to pay and continues to pile up deficits, it is on the road to bankruptcy."

Now I submit to the American people, that that is the grandest Pittsburgher of them all.

On the road to bankruptcy were we?

Tells of Budget Rise.

When that statement was made in the 1932 campaign, the Federal budget was $11,000,000,000 less than it is today; and it was $15,000,000,000 less than the national debt will be next January, when the New Dealers complete the Roosevelt economy program.

Turn to Sioux City, Iowa, where Candidate Roosevelt made another stirring economy speech on September 29, 1932. Said he:

"I shall use this position of high responsibility to discuss up and down the country, in all seasons, at all times, the duty of reducing taxes . . . This I pledge you: and nothing I have said in this campaign transcends in importance this covenant with the taxpayers of this country."

A "covenant" mind you!—A covenant with the workers of this country. And how has the covenant been fulfilled? Month in and month out for more than three years, these happy budget-balancers have spent $2 from the Treasury for every $1 of Federal income.

They tell us now:

"We planned it that way!"

They may have planned it all, but three years of reckless squandering and political boondoggling have not provided jobs for the 11,000,000 unemployed.

They may have planned it all, but after three years of "planned economy" there are more than 20,000,000 citizens on relief!

Such is the economic morass from which the Republican Party is now called to rescue America.

These three long years have demonstrated beyond all question that American cannot squander her way back to sound and sustained prosperity.

They have demonstrated again and again that solid recovery cannot begin until Federal finances are put in order.

There must be an end of Federal squandering.

There must be a return to sanity in Federal fiscal management.

"The Great Decision."

That is the great decision the American electorate will make next November.

What a fantastic scheme of life we have been living!

What a pattern has been set for the American people!

What a tangle of confused purposes and befogged vision!

This Administration has given us the sorry spectacle of a struggling manufacturer thrown into jail in York, Pa., for the violation of an Executive order—of a farmer penalized for having sold his hogs without the proper certificate from Washington—of the persecuted pants-presser in New Jersey arraigned and convicted for the humble pursuit of his trade.

No other Administration has worked so ingeniously and deliberately to inflame the destructive spirit of class conflict among us.

It has made freedom of speech a hollow mockery by its shameful treatment of Gen. Hagood, an Army general, who dared to speak his mind on the question of New Deal "stage money."

It has violated the constitutional right of every citizen to be secure in his personal effects and his papers, and has substituted for ordered liberty a strong-arm regime of snooping, persecution and crack-down.

But overshadowing all these grave assaults upon the liberties of the people is the President's personal affection for a Government dictated collectivist order.

He runs the true course of the dictator. Having seduced the legislative branch by billions in pork barrel patronage, he now casts a calculating eye upon the judiciary, and by advice to Congress and sneer and jibe seeks to usurp the last bulwark of the citizen against unbridled autocracy!

And when the damage has been done—when business is bludgeoned and bleeding, when all trade is burdened by excessive taxation and incompetent bureaucratic regulation—the greatest prestidigitator of the age steps forward with a new magic—a "breathing spell."

"Is This America?"

Can this be America, where citizens live and breathe only by the gracious consent of an ambitious ruler?

Against this demoralizing reign of irresponsible incompetence I hear today America's earnest prayer for deliverance.

The voice of all our people calls us not merely to oppose another political party as in the past, but rather to resist the encroachments of an alien system of capricious personal government.

Shall we measure up to this patriotic duty before us?

I believe we shall. We shall resolve again "that this Nation under God, shall have a new birth of freedom."

We rely upon the great heart and common sense of the American people to swing the Nation back on the true course of its great destiny—the course that experience has shown leads to higher and higher standards of living for all—a course which, until this recent national lunacy was imposed upon us, has been for more than a century, the envy and hope of all the peoples of the world.

This precious light of American freedom must not fail!

This convention beckons America forward! Forward in the paths of orderly progress under law!

Republicanism remains today what its great heritage has made it through the years—a political force which personifies the deeply rooted American instinct for law and order, for true social security and the square deal, for a practical and workable system of government which drives inexorably to the great living ideal of all government—the maximum of social co-operation consistent with the faithful preservation of the just liberties of all the people.

Here alone lies the true path of orderly progress!

To that end does the Republican Party pledge its faith.

We are here—as George Washington said at the constitutional convention—"to raise a standard to which the brave and patriotic may repair. The event is in the hands of God."

If we hold any lesser conception of our duty, we shall be unworthy of the great obligation that confronts us.

But we will not prove unworthy!

In our words and in our actions the sons and daughters of America will find an answer to their hope. We shall speak to their hearts and their consciences; and we shall win.

Pupils to Appear In Recital Tonight

John Marville will present his vocal pupils in their annual spring recital at 8:15 o'clock tonight in Barker Hall, Y. W. C. A. The program will consist of songs in French, German, Italian, Spanish, Greek and English, and arias, duets and choruses from opera, including the quartet from "Rigoletto." The recital, under auspices of Hamline School of Music, is open to the public.

Solos will be sung by Wendell Alderson, Marta Brokow, George I. Chandler, Charles P. Dondero, Kathryn Sale English, Marvin C. Fisher, Estelle McCuen Gates, William Hayghe, James Magill, Leonard McRae, John Murphy, Frank Numbers, Edwin Plowman, Milton Randall, Hallie Mae Reed, Louise Vogel and Jane Winklehaus.

The Hamline ensemble, to be heard in choral numbers, includes the singers previously mentioned, together with Mildred Archer, Richard Cornell, Henry and Wiley Fowler, Glensyre Key, Frank Marvine, Margaret Myers, J. Marlin Smith, Maurice Thompson, Vincent Tilton, Helen Ward and Mary Jean Yocum.

Illinois Disbars Lawyer After Attack By Ickes

Springfield, Ill., June 10 (AP).—Lucius J. M. Malmin, of Chicago, against whom blackmail charges were hurled two years ago by Secretary of the Interior Harold L. Ickes before a Bar Association grievance committee, was disbarred today by the Illinois Supreme Court.

The Secretary alleged Malmin, a former Federal judge of the Virgin Islands, and C. W. Larsen, Chicago lawyer who subsequently was disbarred, attempted to obtain Federal positions by threatening him.

Thomas Case Dropped.

London, June 10 (AP).—No criminal proceedings will be brought against J. H. (Dresshirt Jim) Thomas, who resigned as colonial secretary in the "budget leak" scandal, it was announced today. Sir Donald Somervell, attorney general, made the disclosure to the House of Commons.

Plank Writers Bow to Borah In Proposals

Opposition to League and World Court Voiced in Platform Report.

ly has informed the press that he would accept nothing less than a flat declaration against League or Court entry.

Reminded that John Hamilton, Landon manager, had said he would work personally for any monopoly plank submitted by the Republican Independent, Borah replied that Hamilton was not a member of the resolutions committee.

Borah opposes anything approaching a pledge to return to the gold standard. How strongly he feels on the subject was indicated yesterday, when he read from a newspaper article quoting White as saying he stood on the first gold plank drafted by Mark Hanna in 1896.

"I hope White was misquoted," Borah said. "This proposes an utter impossibility. I can not imagine any more reactionary position than to go back to Mark Hanna for anything."

The Idahoan said he considers the monopoly question a "phase" of the money question. He wants a platform declaration making any monopoly attempt at price-fixing a criminal offense.

Borah said he had not discussed the money plank with any member of the committee, and had gone over the monopoly issue only "in a general way." He said the committee had never promised him the right to defend his planks in the convention, although White has expressed his individual willingness.

Late today, a delegation of farm leaders, including L. J. Taber, of the National Grange; E. A. O'Neal, of the Farm Bureau Federation, and Fred H. Sexauer, of the National Co-operative Counsel, called upon the Idahoan. When they retired, they said they would frame some farm and dollar planks for submission to him.

Farm Views Outlined.

In general, Borah's farm views are said to call for repeal of the reciprocal tariff law in its present form, temporary aids to farmers and restoration of markets to farmers through increased purchasing power.

In its tentative form, the Landon farm plank being drafted by the subcommittee is said to declare for preservation of the "family-sized farm." The preamble declares for adjustment of production to foreign and domestic demand. Features of the plank call for a national land use program, soil conservation administered by the States, encouragement of industrial uses of farm products, an adequate credit policy, aid for distressed areas, and amendment of reciprocal trade treaties to eliminate unfavorable to agriculture.

Mildred School Stages 'Follies,' Dance Exhibits

Show Goes Round World to Reproduce Terpsichorean Types.

In a prologue and two acts, composed of 91 scenes, the Mildred Cchool of Dance presented at the National Theater last evening its "Mildred's Junior Follies of 1936," the sixth in the series of annual productions with routines and dances by Mildred Bargagni.

A near-capacity audience greeted with enthusiasm the plethoric program, comprising solos and ensembles in toe, tap and acrobatic routines. Adding a semblance of continuity to the program, the idea was promulgated that the dances revealed were seen during a world-wide honeymoon.

From the Spain, Scotland, The Netherlands, China and Russia came the usual types of rhythms for this vicarious terpsichorean resume, which at times seemed to bear a distinctly American character. These essential "stops" were interlarded with many a routine of little or no nationality.

Insufficient Rehearsal.

Although the program in its entirety gave marked evidence of being insufficiently rehearsed on the stage as in the practice hall, the older students showed the benefit of their years by offering a smoother performance.

Many good numbers were spotted throughout the bill, so many in fact that particular mention might more discreetly be omitted.

The colorful costumes were designed by Mrs. J. Bargagni and Mrs. M. May. The orchestra for the occasion was under the direction of Mrs. May Besemer. E. B. Smith added a variation to the program by rendering "The Volga Boatmen" as a bass horn solo

A Question Of Dictatorship.

In signing a formal disagreement on the 1937 District appropriations bill the Senate and House conferees narrowed their controversy to one major point. As Senator Thomas commented after the last futile discussion, "It's just a question of whether the District is to be ruled by a dictator or by Congress and the President."

There is grave danger that Washington may be deprived of all public improvements during the next fiscal year. It is necessary only to glance at the list of appropriations in the bill to realize the extent of the hardship that would thus be imposed on the Capital City. Even these potential difficulties, however, are overshadowed by the high-handed assumption of Representative Blanton that he is the final arbiter of matters concerning the District.

Ostensibly, the controversy between the Senate and House conferees centered upon the size of the Federal contribution to the support of the Capital City. But that disagreement might be easily settled if Mr. Blanton were willing to forego further attempts at dictatorship. The breakdown of the conference committee's negotiations came when the Texas Representative positively refused to permit an impartial settlement of the fiscal relations problem. In such circumstances it was impossible for the Senate conferees to yield.

Senators Thomas and Glass very skillfully forced Mr. Blanton into a corner from which he could escape only by yielding to their reasonable compromise or by shamelessly exposing his domineering tactics. Without hesitation the Texan has taken the latter course. His conduct has consequently become a challenge to Congress and the President as well as to the District. In a democratic country no legislative body can afford to tolerate domination from a man who refuses to submit controversial issues to impartial solution. Nor can such resort to fascism be more easily dismissed because it is aimed at the voteless District.

It is evident that President Roosevelt must take a hand in the controversy unless the House itself puts Mr. Blanton in his place. An appropriation bill for Washington must be enacted. And in view of the current squabble it would be farcical to let another year pass without an impartial study of the District's fiscal problem. Apparently these objectives can be obtained only by taking the matter entirely out of Mr. Blanton's hands. If the House has any appreciation of its own responsibility, it will take that urgent step without waiting for proddings from the Executive Mansion.

Confession Of Error.

A few weeks ago President Green of the American Federation of Labor told a meeting of the Women's Trade Union League that it would be unwise "to make any change in our great, forward-looking social movement—the one we have at present." By thus using the prestige of his office to solicit votes for President Roosevelt, Mr. Green inevitably cast suspicion upon the A. F. of L.'s declaration of allegiance to traditional non-partisan policies.

The unfortunate result of this act became evident when Mr. Green appeared before the resolutions committee at Cleveland to urge the insertion of various labor planks in the Republican party platform. He was compelled under challenge to reaffirm the intention of his organization to maintain its non-partisan attitude during the coming campaign. His remarks before the W. T. U. L. had been misconstrued, at least in some circles, as reflecting the views of the A. F. of L.

This episode clearly shows how unwise it is for a labor leader to publicize his personal views if he expects to follow the bargaining tactics that have enabled the A. F. of L. in the past to make its influence felt in shaping the policies of both major parties. By emphasizing the allegiance of the A. F. of L. to customary procedure, Mr. Green has now inferentially condemned those open avowals of his own partisanship.

In practice the labor leader who insists upon his right as a private citizen to say what he thinks disqualifies himself as an effective spokesman for his fellows. For example, the controversy in the American Federation of Government Employes, precipitated by the anti-Administration attack of its president, Claude E. Babcock, is a natural and self-protective response of members who believe in the principles for which the federation has always stood.

It should be the aim of every leader of organized labor to secure a maximum amount of support for those policies that are believed to be in the interest of the workingman. When partisanship rears its head and efforts are made to commit a labor organization to one candidate or one party, labor's ability to influence the action taken by the opposing party is greatly weakened. To a lesser degree, but indubitably, a labor organization which permits a partisan individual to conduct its negotiations with political party leaders weakens its own position as an independent bargaining agency.

Mr. Hoover at Cleveland.

The real keynote of the Republican campaign was sounded in Cleveland last night, by a man who until very recently was not even scheduled to address the convention.

In a magnificent speech, free from partisanship, vindictiveness, or perceptible personal ambitions of any kind, Herbert Hoover rose to an opportunity which other members of his party have signally failed to grasp. The former President clothed thoughts of the most fundamental importance in language which was Lincolnesque in its simplicity and clarity. And his vast audience, cheering him to the echo, amply demonstrated its appreciation of a great oratorical triumph.

There was no ranting, no posturing for effect, no false note in what Mr. Hoover had to say. His words rose above the sordid battle of politics to carry a message which any objective thinker, surveying the national scene at the present critical moment, might have addressed to the American people.

So the address owed its effectiveness not merely to what was actually said, but also to the fact that its ideas winged their way to minds avid for constructive leadership. This leadership, of the elder statesman type, is something which Americans have the right to expect from their former Presidents. And richly Mr. Hoover demonstrated that his thought for the welfare of this country did not terminate when he laid down the responsibilities of executive office.

Part of the sweeping force of this speech came from its high moral sense; its appeal to an instinctive idealism which no frustration, no cynicism and no perversion can eradicate from the national character. Part of its power came from the breath of thought which a scholarly mind has accumulated in the studies of a lifetime, and which was tonight presented in a form so skillfully concentrated that the least scholarly could appreciate its moment. And, not least in value, part of the appeal was clearly due to a cutting yet good-humored wit to which Americans are particularly susceptible, and which was the more acceptable because Mr. Hoover has not always possessed this faculty in such sparkling form.

The eager manner in which the heretofore apathetic convention responded to this address was itself an indication of its quality. But it was only an indication. For Mr. Hoover's words were of that character which grows upon reflection, and his thoughts were developed and co-ordinated in a manner which demands their consideration as a unified whole. As such this speech will not merely be of great value in the campaign, but will long outlive the occasion of its delivery.

Occasionally, in the history of a nation, a partisan struggle produces a concentration of thought which ranks not as campaign oratory but as fundamental political philosophy. That was the service Mr. Hoover did for the amorphous, disorganized but resurgent Republican Party at Cleveland last night. For the leadership which he has given at a critical moment that party may be permanently grateful. He has made it easier for its disorganized groups to reform their lines and, in his own ringing words, "to retake, recapture and reman the citadels of liberty."

But beyond this he has made a vital contribution to American political thinking, and to the cause of those of every nation who fight for the preservation of democratic institutions.

Relief Costs Can Be Cut.

A survey by the research bureau of the Republican National Committee shows that since the towns and cities of New Jersey have been deprived of State aid in financing direct relief the number of cases has declined 38 per cent in 44 municipalities, while total costs have been cut more than 50 per cent.

This shrinkage in the relief load cannot be attributed solely to the superiority of local over centralized systems of administration. The failure of the New Jersey Legislature to provide relief funds undoubtedly deprived some municipalities of much needed aid and forced a certain amount of economy at the expense of the destitute. However, heads of local organizations testify that numerous "chiselers" have been dropped from relief rolls since control was shifted and that payments have been adjusted more closely to the necessities of the individual.

Certainly this reduction in relief costs has been too marked to be contemptuously dismissed by Mr. Hopkins as evidence of a "return to indecent, degrading Elizabethan methods of poor-law administration by local overseers of the poor." This is a typical back-handed defense of the wasteful methods of the Federal relief system. Apparently Mr. Hopkins refuses to admit that the cost of relief must be adapted to the taxable capacity of the country. Demands for economy are treated as if they were brutal assaults upon the helpless unemployed instead of valid objections to wasteful relief methods.

In his recent testimony before a House sub-committee Mr. Hopkins himself stated that WPA work relief costs on the average over twice as much per case as the system of direct relief which it superseded. And the FERA was certainly not conspicuous for economical administration.

It is evident from Mr. Hopkins' own statements that tremendous savings could be effected by abandoning WPA methods in favor of direct relief, without taking it "out of the hide of the unemployed." Furthermore, if the administration of direct relief were decentralized, with responsibility transferred to State and local authorities, still greater economies could be effected, as the experience of New Jersey shows.

If the WPA were helping to solve the unemployment problem and if relief costs were properly declining, the country might be willing to endure the political abuses of the present system in the belief that any kind of job is preferable to an outright dole. However, Mr. Hopkins admits that about 10,000,000 people are probably still unemployed, and he cannot deny that the relief rolls of New York and some other large cities obstinately refuse to contract. In face of this record of non-accomplishment, the only excuse for continuing the ineffective and inordinately expensive WPA is the fear of political repercussions that would follow its abandonment.

The Jeffersonian Example.

By an adroit but rather forced transition, President Roosevelt turned from a eulogy of pioneer Arkansas in his centennial address to laudation of Jefferson's daring in acquiring the territory known as the Louisiana Purchase.

Jefferson was told by some of his closest advisers and friends, said the President, "that the Constitution of the United States contained no clause authorizing him to purchase or acquire additional territory; and that because specific authority did not exist under the great charter of the Government, none could be exercised." Because Jefferson ignored these warnings, Mr. Roosevelt said; because Congress voted the purchase money and nobody had cause to bring suit, the people of Arkansas and a vast adjacent territory live today under the Stars and Stripes.

The President left his audience to draw the moral and make the application he so plainly suggested to the conditions of the present day. He also seized the opportunity to paint an imaginary portrait of another distinguished character in American history—Andrew Jackson. In his reference to Jackson's tempestuous encounters with the entrenched and privileged few, the public is again encouraged to search for analogies between the standard-bearers of the New Deal of 1836 and that of 1936. Some in the audience, moved by the power of suggestion, must have felt that they were looking at the present-day counterpart of that political savior of democracy who was swept into office over a hundred years ago to free the common people from their subjection to a rich and tyrannous ruling class.

This romanticized version of the rescue of early nineteenth century America from the grip of plutocracy would be mildly amusing if it had not been offered as a prelude to serious discussion of the constitutional problems presented by the changed conditions of modern economic life. Few will disagree with the President's view that modern conditions require new kinds of legislative treatment. The national government must have power to deal with problems of national concern that States and localities can no longer handle adequately, just as State governments have to take over certain local functions.

Conceding this necessity, it is, nevertheless, very important that the method of meeting the situation shall be one that commends itself to a democratic people living under a government of laws and guided by a written Constitution. Yet concerning the method of meeting the constitutional issue President Roosevelt is significantly silent. Does his applause for Jefferson's indifference to constitutional limitations imply that he thinks the Constitution may safely and profitably be forgotten when the national interest appears to warrant such an attitude? In the absence of any positive recommendation for amending the Constitution to remove existing obstacles to an extension of the Federal power along lines advocated by the President, it is difficult to escape the inference that such is his meaning.

Tip To Pedalists.

Last Sunday's Baltimore Sun described the Hike-and-Bike Train which runs from that city on a regular week-end schedule in summery imitation of the snow trains so popular farther north. Two Washingtonians were reported to have been members of the excursion which took a handful of walkers and a battalion of cyclists off for a day around Harpers Ferry. The wonder is that the Capital was not better represented for there is no lack of bike consciousness here. But apparently our riders are still in the around-the-Tidal-Basin stage.

Not so, their Baltimore cousins, however. They charter a special train with a baggage car for their bikes; they arrange for guides and plan a 20-mile route that will not only take them through pleasant country but will have enough hills and runs to make the trip enjoyable for old and young, male and female, alike. The result is a day of fresh air, new scenery and exhilarating exercise.

Downtrodden Austria.

To the Editor of The Post—Sir: Your editorial musings anent "Uneasy Austria" recall to me what Norman Douglas wrote in one of his earlier books. "When one lives out of Europe," he says, "one learns to know better." To see things at their true perspective one must take up a stand at a proper distance from them.

Some countries, England, for instance, only begin to show their true proportions at a point where other lands cease to be visible. Austria, on the other hand, can only be examined on the spot. Once you have crossed the ocean, this immense and fertile country (which Austria certainly was in 1912), with its long history of rulers and battles, has already faded into air. Ca n'existe plus. Gladstone explained the phenomenon correctly: "Austria has never done good to the world."

Nor, may I add, to its own people. Beset by two merciless dictators in north and south, and by the freed republics of its former vassal states, Austria today is an unhappy island surrounded by a sea of hate. Crushed and downtrodden, their pride broken, the Austrians might well turn again to their old slavery. Accustomed through so many centuries to grovel before thrones, they may recall the Hapsburgs once more to rule them and take from them the burden of ruling themselves.

An End To Sentiment.

To the Editor of The Post—Sir: A statement in The Post of June 8 under the caption, "Convention Is Man's World," interests me. This is the statement: "This in itself cannot excuse the pitifully small place which women have won for themselves in the high command of the major parties."

This interests me particularly because such statement betrays that the masculine mind has not yet attained any greater knowledge of humanity than was current at the time my father took me to elections some 45 years ago.

Believe it or not, women are part of humanity. Man is again reaching his sub-zero peak; women are lagging just a trifle, according to the eternal law. It would be better for the world if men would try to understand. Women are so sick of sentiment. Why not try justice?

Change Of Heart.

To the Editor of The Post—Sir: I have been a Democrat all my life and have always voted the Democratic ticket in national elections, but I want to say "amen" to everything that Mr. Melvin J. Anderson stated in his letter published in The Post on June 9.

I will be found in the Republican camp this year. A. EDWARD.

Landon Stopped?

To the Editor of The Post—Sir: The Post has apparently given over all its big type to the question of Mr. Landon's chances. "Claim That Landon Is Stopped," and "Landon Is Not Stopped" we read in alternative editions.

Please let us have some news for a change. Of course, Landon is "stopped." He was stopped before he started — stopped by his own utter mediocrity and by the excellent record of Franklin D. Roosevelt.

What Makes A 'Show?'

When you go to the movies, do you prefer to see one good picture or two that are only so-so? This is what the double-bill problem in the film theaters simmers down to. There simply are not enough good stories to keep up the general quality in the Hollywood product under the present custom of showing two films at every show offered in at least half the theaters in the United States.

Warner Brothers Corporation, one of the larger producing concerns, is trying to find out how the majority of film patrons feel about the double bill. Returns so far indicate that the radio listeners who have been invited to express a preference are two to one in favor of single features. Inquiries conducted with other consuming groups are running even higher in favor of one main film on a program.

Widows' Herrings.

By an ancient ordinance of the Town of Pembrooke, in Plymouth County, Mass., widows and spinsters are entitled to 200 herrings free of charge. The herring rights are communal; townsfolk outside the privileged classes may have the fish at a cent apiece. To obtain them the applicant must go between sunup Tuesday and sundown Thursday to Herring Brook, which empties into the North River. The widows and spinsters have shown little interest lately in their rights to the product of the fishery. Selectman Edgar Thayer said last week that he knew of none who had claimed her herrings this year.

Security And Crime.

To the Editor of The Post—Sir: Ambrose Julian Fahy has again given us a demonstration of clear thinking. I refer specifically to his recent article on the subject of crime.

The great majority of our crime is the direct offspring of a distorted economic order. Surprisingly little, believe it or not, finds its incipiency in sadism or a desire for eccentric notoriety. We can expect law-breaking galore just as long as economic insecurity is permitted to stalk the length and breadth of our land—crime commissions, prosecuting attorneys, penitentiaries, and J. Edgar Hoover notwithstanding.

Under our existing economic system, where one is denied the privilege—or absolute right—of working for a living, he must resort to the twin evils of begging and stealing. And the latter is no doubt the less heinous of the two.

What percentage of crime in America today is the direct result of economic necessity? I don't know, but I shall hazard the guess that the percentage is shockingly large.

All too long we have dealt with results. Why not give a little attention to causes?

PLEBEIAN.
Washington, June 9.

To the Editor of The Post—Sir: It is shocking to read the letters on crime which tell so clearly the conditions underlying the causes. If penal systems have proven to be creators of more serious criminals, and slums are responsible for a large percentage of future potential criminals, why is this state of affairs allowed to continue? Are politicians or citizens guilty of allowing us to drift along with crime, and all its attendant evils, increasing every day?

I read of thorough research in criminology, and its treatment, offering ways and means for effective measures for decreasing crime. Will someone explain why these measures are not carried out? If a moral issue is not at stake there certainly must be a political and economic one. E. O. H.

On Being Bourgeois.

According to reports from Moscow, the revolution will have to be fought all over again. In that city and others of Sovietland, waiters, porters, chambermaids, hat check girls and barbers are streching their hands out for tips. This is a decidedly bourgeois custom, and fervent Communists felt they had scotched that particular snake in the country of the Slav.

Russian officials are taking official cognizance of the tipping evil and seeking to stamp it out. The most interesting angle for speculation is how anybody in Sovietland ever acquired enough property so that he felt a tip, no matter how small, would not be missed. If there are any such portly representatives of capitalism left in the Leftist paradise, the various commissars will have their work cut out.

In many parts of Europe the casual American tourist reaches the conclusion that half the population lives off the gratuities it can chisel from its visitors this summer, all, of course, from capitalistic countries. In stretching the palm forth for kopecs, the devout Communist is, in reality, merely practicing. He foresees a happy day in the near future when he can spoil the Egyptians who frequent Soviet shores in order to find out whether the Soviet economy is a ghastly mess or too, too divine. The Russian is taking lessons in the art of being bourgeois.

Dirty Cities.

Results of a study of atmospheric pollution conducted in 14 large cities by the United States Public Health Service during the years 1931-1933 have been public. Listed alphabetically, the four cleanest cities are Detroit, Los Angeles, San Francisco and Washington, D. C. The cities in the middle group are Buffalo, Cleveland, New Orleans, New York and Philadelphia. St. Louis is one of the dirtiest five, the others being Baltimore, Boston, Chicago and Pittsburgh.

The G-Men—Pro And Con

To the Editor of The Post—Sir: The perspicacious observations of Pegler on J. Edgar Hoover are refreshing. That they were permitted to be published by The Post is comforting to those who thought it impossible.

Let Mr. Corey look back over the headlines of the past two years. He will be able to chart the movements of Justice men during the whole period. The pursued bandit could follow one chain newspaper and predict the presence of G-men at a precise point at a precise moment. For this information the ballyhoo for Hoover became nauseating. It has pervaded the entire press.

The United States Scotland Yard is the department's objective. Let Mr. Corey find the face of the chief of that Yard spread on the front pages of papers throughout the United Kingdom, accompanied by fulsome editorial boosts. Let him produce an account in English papers of detailed prospective movements of Yard operatives while in search of a thing.

After this search Mr. Corey may not object to a slight breeze passing through many of these stifling spots where a bit of fresh air might revive the jobholders. A. F. T.
Washington, June 9.

To the Editor of The Post—Sir: As a visitor here I have been taken through the Bureau of Investigation and, while looking at the list of the men who have given their lives so that we may put our babies to bed with hope of their staying there, without our having to do sentry with shotguns, Mr. Pegler's article flashed into my mind with its "smart alec" criticism of men who are doing something to give the country at large a "new birth of righteousness."

Has he ever seen that memorial. I wonder? If he ever does, I hope as he stands there some voice will whisper in his ear this quotation from another member of the fourth estate:

Beside that corpse, which bears for winding sheet
The Stars and Stripes he strove to rear anew;
Beside those mourners at his head and feet,
"Say, scurrile jester, is there room for you?"

Old Lady Weather

I HAVE been married to him a good many years and I love every blundering thought in his silly old head. When I deceive him it is always for his own good; and, of course, also for my own amusement.

The trouble is he tries to run me; to tell me what I have to do, and when, and how; and I refuse to be handled that way.

In a way I'm a little to blame. When an actress marries her advance agent she may expect that he will expect to know something of her plans in advance. How else, he points out, can he give her the right kind of publicity? He thinks I should stick closely to my schedule, and I do, in a general way—Spring, Summer, Autumn and Winter. But, my gracious, a woman can't be forever toeing the mark, day in and day out. There's got to be a little variety.

Poor old Weather Man! I'm not really unkind, but I confess I'm amused rather than hurt when he is abused for things for which he is in nowise responsible. I alone am to blame. I, Old Lady Weather, herself, in person, no mere moving picture. And, oh, how he growls at me as he fusses with his charts and instruments. "Thoroughly flighty and unstable!" he says. "Never know your own mind more than for a minute."

Silly! If you know your mind the present minute that's all that's necessary. The next minute's another minute, with responsibilities and duties of its own. And a woman has more fun when she can decide things as she goes along.

Take yesterday. I was chatting with a colony of ants. "Be nice children," I said, "and I'll bring you a Sunday school picnic to have fun with." And so I did, with the sun shining and everything. And, oh, didn't those ants have a lovely time in the sardines and the sliced tomatoes and the cucumbers and the potted tongue and—well, it's true some of the little ones got all tangled up in the butter and the jam, but these things will happen to the wisest and best of us.

And then, just a little later, I was talking to a sweet potato plant and she said, "What we want is rain and plenty of it." Well, she's a dear, sweet thing and there was nothing to do but oblige. It simply ruined the Sunday school picnic, but am I to blame for that?

Oh, well, these things will come about. They have been bobbing up every day or so since we were introduced in the Garden of Eden in order to give Adam and Eve a subject for conversation. I had my little song and dance and Old Prob was stooge and interpreter. He has always been the vocal end of the team, and yet people say a woman invariably has the last word.

Nice young people, Adam and Eve, but they had to grow sophisticated at last, poor things. We got too tame for them and Sin came in with his serpent act. And after that it was only a step to the Day's Work and the Sport Page.

While it is true Old Prob begins to show some sign of age, I am still a young thing. "Old Lady Weather" is simply a term of affection. I'm as young as the year. Younger. Actually there are times when I'm just a kid; mischievous as old Get-Out. I simply can't refrain from playing tricks on the 12 Calendar Sisters; and (since my hair is down) on some more than others, for the best of us play favorites. April, for instance, rouses the divvle in me. I can't resist the impulse to hide Jupiter Pluvius' watering pot or to knock the bottom out of it and give her a deluge. And I'm not above playing tricks on May.

May's a dear child, but there are times when her perpetual grin irritates me. She's been spoiled by the poets. Just a little conceited, that's what she is. The last time I saw her she insisted on reading some of her recent press notices. "Oh, dry up!" said I, and saw to it that she did. That's once she didn't have a good press.

June's my favorite month. It's the first month in which I can really laze; knee deep, as Riley says. I love to loaf with her in the country, forgetting convention, just being happy. Some of the conventions I can't forget, naturally—the political ones. The delegates worry me a little. I say to myself, "They have their coats off, but I do hope they keep their shirts on." And then I turn my job over to General Humidity and beat it. The general loves that kind of thing. When he goes into battle there are always a lot of casualties.

I'm not much interested in Politics and Trade, but there's no denying they're interested in me. Take Lawn Mowers and Lemons. When I dry up lawns and throats sales of the mowers go down and sales of the lemons go up. And the necessity of Preparing for a Rainy Day has been for past generations of bees, ants, squirrels and human beings a political, sociological, biological, physiological and psychological tenet. It is true that as a human doctrine it is at the moment just a trifle wilted, but I've seen that kind of thing happen before and it will probably freshen up after the inevitable deluge.

What really rasps me at the present time is man's endeavor to circumvent me with irrigation outdoors and air-conditioning indoors. It looks as though people were beginning to think they can get along without Old Lady Weather and the thought threatens to drive me into a fit of italics.

What do they expect to talk about when the baseball and football seasons are over?

Fair Enough

By Westbrook Pegler.

Foe Of Rum.

Cleveland, June 10.

Could that be Willie Upshaw, the old Georgia Bible flogger and prohibition Democrat, walking around the lobby of the Hotel Cleveland, openly mingling with the foul Republicans, including some colored brethren of the party, and selling little books on communism and whisky, entitled "Bombshells for Wets and Reds"? Surely a Republican convention is no place for the likes of Willie Upshaw. But it could be none other than Willie himself. No other man ever handled crutches in the same way. Willie carries his crutches as lightly as another man might swing a walking stick. When he walks he tucks them up under his arms and carries them. When he comes to rest he puts them down and roosts upon them, easing his tired feet. And it would be no test of Willie Upshaw's gall to crash in on a Republican convention in this their own time, of weakness and woe to chisel a little something for himself. Nothing has ever tested Willie's gall.

No doubt about it. That was Willie Upshaw, late Democratic Congressman from the State of Georgia, who got drunk at the age of 16, made his 60-year-old mother cry like her heart was plumb broke, and took a holy resolve in the throes of his hangover when morning dawned never to give whisky an even break in all his life, so help him A'mighty Gawd.

Willie, no longer a Democrat, but a prohibitionist now, swung on his crutches in the crowd, casting his beady eyes over the churning multitude of Republicans. He espied the florid countenance of Mr. Fred Britten, who served 22 consecutive years as a wet Republican Congressman from Chicago. Willie tucked his crutches under his wings, crossed the lobby in a couple of agile bounds and clutched the hand of his old foe. They are both former Congressmen now, both a little angry at their fate and philosophical about the spats which agitated their days on opposite sides of the prohibition question. Willie was heaved out of Congress by an ingrate electorate nine years ago. A few years later he went back one day in the role of old grad and claimed his lawful privilege of frequenting the floor of the House of Representatives when some prohibition question was up. Mr. Britten caught him whispering among the dries, denounced him for lobbying contrary to the rules and had former Congressman Upshaw hoisted out of there, squealing and vowing vengeance.

But now Mr. Upshaw is indeed delighted to meet his old enemy again, and Mr. Britten seemed rather pleased himself to meet a fellow sufferer from the welts inflicted by outrageous fortune.

* * * *

"What are you doing to keep in action" Mr. Britten inquired. At this Mr. Britten skinned a dollar off his roll and bought an autographed copy of "Bombshells for West and Reds," being the collected orations of William D. Upshaw, late Congressman and prohibition candidate for President in 1932, the year that repeal went through.

"Are you still going around telling lies to Sunday schools about wholesome, nutritious whisky?" Mr. Britten inquired.

"I am fighting for the Lord against the curse of the communistic atheism, the foe of God's teaching, the American home and the sanctity of American womanhood," said Mr. Upshaw, "and I manage to do all right. I am still fighting the accursed serpent in the bottle which steals away the brain of man, the ideals and purity of womankind and destroys the youth of this fair land, besides staining with a foul and reeking blot the starry flag whose stripes symbolize the virtue of patriotism and the blood of martyrdom."

"I am getting along all right," he said. "I make purity speeches and promote youth and sell my little book, and I manage to get by, Fred. You know how it is with me. I am all pep and inspiration. I go great with youth because I understand youth and give them that pep all the time."

Mr. Upshaw is a scrawny little man with some curious bodily infirmity which requires the support of the crutches when he is standing still. In walking he doesn't need them, and many skeptics have suspected that he carried the crutches only for pathos. At the long convention in Madison Square Garden, when the Ku Klux Klan was snarling back at the roar of Tammany Hall, Mr. Upshaw he upped with a crutch one wild and sweaty afternoon and threatened to bat the ears off any whiskey-guzzling, maiden-betraying fiend spawned out of hell—which was a roundabout way of saying any wet—who dared lay hands on him. This was rather startling, because no whiskey-guzzling, maiden-betraying fiend spawned out of hell, or wet, was making any passes at the Congressman from Georgia. But Willie was just declaring his policy in the event that passes should be made at him.

* * * *

The Tammany men began shouting, "Oil! Oil Oil!" at William G. McAdoo, a native Georgian, who was Mr. Upshaw's man at that time, and Mr. Upshaw nearly stampeded the convention when he rose up and, in a shrill, wild, camp-meeting voice, retorted, "Whisky! Whisky! Whisky." In the confusion of the moment the New York patriots thought Mr. Upshaw was ballyhooing a new speakeasy. The New York patriots could not imagine anyone's shouting "Whisky! Whisky! Whisky!" as an accusation.

"I wish," Mr. Upshaw said, "I could get aholt of the Republican platform committee for a few minutes and tell them in the name of the good Lord Gawd A'mighty that they have got to come to Gawd and denounce Communistic atheism and accursed rum before they can ever carry another election. It is Gawd A'mighty's word I want to tell them, even if they are Republicans and I'm a prohibitionist.

Le Front Populaire

American Consults Three French Observers For Significance Of New Political Faction Which Offers Another New Deal.

By Mary G. Cary.

Special Correspondence of The Post.

Paris.

OUTWARDLY, last week, Paris was much the same as always. There was the Salon, the Grand Prix, the Cezanne exhibition in the Orangerie and Furtwaengler conducting the "Meistersaenger"—a feast of intellectual stimulus and lighter divertissement. But inwardly, Paris was in an uproar. The cause was the huge triumph of the Front Populaire.

Rumors flew about of threats received by 200 of the leading families of France. M. Maurras, of the "Action Francaise," had been imprisoned for inciting the knifing of Premier-Designate Blum. There was endless talk of new financial policies ranging from deflation to forcing hoarders to replace their money sent abroad and of wild plans for the government to buy out the stock of the Bank of France. Vague whispers were heard that Moscow-directed Communists were laying plans to foment civil war.

Woman Journalist Gives Her Views.

WHAT WAS this Front Populaire? I put the question first to a young editor, the son of a prominent Protestant. Said he:

"It is composed of the Paris workers, of course, and part of the discontented elements in the provinces. Paris is now more to the left than at any time since the Commune, although the press of the provinces is 'redder' than in Paris.

"The Front Populaire got its huge vote as a protest of those who wanted a change. It was organized in the actual Communist wing by the Third Internationale in Moscow, but now Russia is urging the French leaders to go easily for fear of spreading sabotage in the army and big industries and thus weakening France's power in case of an attack by Germany on Russia.

"You ask the role that the French Protestants play just now politically. There are a little over a million of them in France today and some of them are in the famous '200 families' that the Front Populaire wishes to deprive of their financial power. They also own five of the largest banks in France, and almost all the members of the Croix de Feu in one of the wealthier Paris arrondissements are Protestants.

"But there are thousands of Protestants in the working districts who belong to the Front Populaire. Many of the leading young Protestant pastors are ardent members and are international pacifists. Nevertheless, they are willing to advocate class warfare in order to obtain the ends that the welfare of the people demand."

It is said that many young priests in the Catholic Church in the Benedictine and Franciscan orders are also enthusiastic for the Front.

Movement Resembled Religious Crusade.

HASTILY swallowing a cup of coffee to help clear my brain for the next interview with a leading woman journalist, I jumped into one of the tiny, stream-lined, red Renault taxis and sped across the Seine past the Invalides, the dome of which is completely covered with scaffolding, symbolic perhaps of the regeneration at work in France. The lady received us and promised a half hour. She would gladly speak English, as she had studied two years at Oxford and covered the Far East as correspondent for a great Paris daily.

"You ask the meaning of the Front Populaire?" she said. "It heralds the beginning of the doom of European capitalism. We are going back here in France to the original principles of the French Revolution. This government of M. Blum is a transition government, for it is based on two parties that are rapidly decreasing in influence, the Socialist and Radical Socialist parties. It is a good thing that the Communists refused collaboration, for when they come into power, they will have no strings to their program and no past commitments.

"This Front Populaire is one of the greatest movements of the real people of France that we have had in modern times. On the day that we celebrated our victory with a parade of over 500,000 I waited with my group for seven and a half hours before we marched, although we were the third in line. It took all that time for the people to get arranged, they were so many, but there was no disorder and not a policeman along the route.

"The Front Populaire does not expect to resort to violence and can handle its own affairs, but do not forget that the Communists especially are strongly nationalist and will defend France against a Fascist invasion to the last man.

"As for the frightful affair of February 6, 1934, and the revelations of the Stavisky scandal, they have turned the popular mind against the right wing. The brutal treatment of the crowd by the police is blamed on the powers that directed them rather than on the violence of the mobs. The corruptions disclosed by the Stavisky trials proved to extend far back of the Herriot government's period in office and are looked on as closely connected with leading conservative political groups. France is now roused as never before in all directions against the Rightist elements."

As I said my thanks and goodbyes, I saw a booklet on the lady's table published by the "Comite de Vigilance des Intellectuels Antifascists." One remembered the salons of eighteenth-century Paris and saw their lineal descendants as determined and as intellectually able in the great cause of "liberte, egalite, fraternite."

Tocsin Has Sounded For Liberty And Bread.

IN THE CORRIDORS of a great news service building we met a tall, keen journalist, whose manner in getting down to the business in hand was almost American.

"The campaign of the Front Populaire," he said, "was almost like a religious crusade, evangelical, one might say. Now there is harmony in the Front, while everyone is hoping for the best, but one day when this enthusiasm wears off, a change may come that will give France something between Marxian socialism and communism.

"Paris and the provinces are at present not at odds. Paris is over 70 per cent leftist and the provinces are mostly Socialist and Radical Socialist. Blum said two years ago he was afraid of what might happen if he were elected. He knows now that he must hold the Front Populaire together without violence. As a Jew he is opposed only by an intellectual group of monarchists and members of the 'Action Francaise,' who are politically insignificant.

"Of course, the most important thing that M. Blum has to do is to build up France's position again internationally. He believes that the way to this leads not to London, Berlin or Rome, but to Geneva. But in the beginning he must bring out some spectacular plan on which to start negotiations. This will include first, disarmament proposals with economic and colonial concessions as a bait to unwilling and dissatisfied powers. Secondly, he will advocate a reform of the League. This will consist of a series of military regional mutual assistance pacts, which would come into immediate force in the case of aggression. A very important part of this second point would be economic and financial sanctions that would automatically follow, not precede, military action in a case of aggression.

"Blum found the prestige of France at a very low ebb. Laval and Boncour had between them lost all the allies of France, so the new government must make friends at all costs. He will probably be willing to permit the extension of sanctions until the Assembly meets in September if Great Britain will permit a firm policy on the part of France in connection with the refortification of the Rhineland. Blum is convinced that Hitler wants to hold off France at the Rhine when she comes to the aid of Russia in case of a German attack on the Soviet."

Bowed Out With French Politeness.

I WAS bowed out with all French politeness and shown the way down to the bustle of the great city.

One hundred thousand strikers were at that moment sitting in the factories of the huge Renault and Citroen Works, as well as in shops for airplane manufacturing, machinery plants and other allied industries. The tocsin had sounded for liberty and bread and better conditions, and without any violence the workers were achieving what they asked for.

The leftist press was reporting a vast mass meeting of the women of the Front Populaire, attended according to "Le Populaire" by our friend Leon Blum and Citizeness Blum," at which the Prime Minister-elect promised everything possible to women. "I arianne," the moderate weekly, was reminding its readers of M. Blum's long and honorable services in the Chamber and that he had been the innocent victim of Fascist aggression, that France did not want civil war, but desired to defend the "most beautiful kingdom under heaven," the second largest colonial empire in the world, and the greatest cultural and moral inheritance that a nation had ever possessed. Rearmament, public works and loyal backing of the government were in the cards, not endless financial legislation.

In other words, France is now launching forth on a new and uncharted course that sounds like a New Deal.

The Once Over

By H. I. Phillips.

Suggestions for Any Party's Platform.

We believe in the stop, look and listen sign.

We believe in the re-establishment of the red light to its former position of prestige and authority at all dangerous intersections in thought and action.

We believe America, the carpers notwithstanding, has a bright future provided it stops regarding it as a by-product of opinion.

We believe the contention that the average American needs a wet nurse, a Government guide and a Federal escort to achieve happiness is an exaggeration.

* * * *

We believe this is an age of reform and that many changes will have to be made in the old-fashioned philosophy of Government, but that a careful preliminary study of the maps and objectives is highly desirable in order to know whether we are heading for the Promised Land or a ride on a Ferris wheel.

We believe both major parties now realize the public can't be kidded in the good old-fashioned way and that the demand of the hour is for straight shooting.

We believe the first thing for any candidate to admit is the impossibility of changing human nature in four years, no matter how pretty the set-up is.

* * * *

We believe that it is among man's paramount ambitions to get ahead of the other fellow, to make as much money as he can and to believe that his own business is his own business.

We believe the urge to succeed is a fundamental characteristic and that the average voter's share-the-wealth ideas only hold up to the point where he finds himself in the money.

* * * *

We believe the American people instinctly resent the hold-up, the ambuscade, the stick-up and the process known as dry cleaning; and that this instinct isn't modified by a realization that it is done by his Government instead of a yeggman.

We believe the present President of the United States found himself in one of the tough spots of history when he took office; that he had some noble ambitions, and that his performance was inspiring and valiant; but we believe that even he, if elected, will stop shooting at the moon.

We believe that the folly of bankrupting the United States Treasury, socking big business and taxing thrift to the hilt is now appreciated by everybody (including the Democrats), and that, no matter who wins the election, there will be a return to horse sense, simple arithmetic and the abandonment of the baloney standard.

* * * *

We believe it the height of injustice to harness ocean currents at the rate of a million dollars per harness and say "Send the bill to my great-grandchildren."

We believe the dust storms, the 1936 spring floods and Congressman Zioncheck would have happened even if the Republicans had been in power.

We believe that the spirit of the times calls not for criticism and denunciation, but for helpful suggestion and a general determination to take a deep breath, look around, see what it's all about and act according to the dictates of our consciences as American citizens.

The November Horoscope.

The campaign will at least show how many Republicans are left in this country, whether big bills frighten many people any more and whether there is a life after a Democratic landslide.

Elmer Twitchell thinks the valor medal for 1936 should go to the Vice Presidential nominee on the Republican ticket. "Imagine a man wanting to run second on a ticket when the man who runs first has only an outside chance of winning," says Elmer.

Character Of Cats

By William Lyon Phelps.

There is an interesting letter in the London Spectator, from which I will quote some sentences. The author writes from the town of Lewes, and his name is Wilfrid S. Jackson. It is clear that whether or not he overestimates feline intelligence, he has plenty of that commodity in his own head.

* * * *

I am a victim to the cat, but though fascinated I am not blinded. She is a bad lot, but of her intelligence there is no question.

I have long heard a theory that the proverb as to her nine lives is misunderstood, and that her "nine lives" are her nine ways of getting a living. Maybe she has more, but nine are easily tabulated. She can (1) lie in wait, (2) stalk, (3) pounce, (4) spring, (5) climb, (6) fish, (7) fight, (8) cajole, (9) steal. . . .

If intelligence be to know your own interest and follow it exclusively, by force, fraud, or flattery, using the strong hand or the velvet glove, killing without mercy, thieving without shame, and accepting favors so prettily that you seem to confer a favor, why then it seems to me that the poor silly dog has but his virtue to keep him warm.

It is on the dog's virtues that his friends must concentrate. He has the elements of religion in him, as Anatole France has pointed out. He knows reverence and he knows shame—the cat knows neither. The dog is not clever. No. But he is good. The cat is not good. But she does belong to the intelligentsia.

Wise Is Named By Virginians To Head Party

G.O.P. Delegation's Caucus Defeats Move for Poll on Nominee.

By the Associated Press.

Cleveland, June 10.—Virginia Republicans at the convention today turned out National Committeeman Joseph L. Crupper in one major delegation controversy, but shied off a showdown on Presidential preference.

Successful managers for Maj. Henry A. Wise, Kiptopeke, elected to succeed Crupper, were quick to say his 3-to-1 majority was a blow to the strength of the old faction once headed by C. Bascom Slemp, of the Ninth District, that would "put new life in the party in Virginia."

They denied vigorously that Presidential nominee preferences figured at all in the ousting of the Rosslyn incumbent, a former Norfolk postmaster, who is completing his first term in the office.

Immediately after the Wise selection, the caucus defeated a move for a Presidential nominee poll with an overwhelming vote to postpone it at least until tomorrow.

Wise declined to comment on his victory "because the caucus action has to be confirmed by the convention." His friends said it was the "culmination of an intraparty fight started around Col. Henry W. Anderson, Richmond, in 1921."

A formal statement by L. S. Parsons, Norfolk, chairman of the Second District, said:

"As one favoring the re-election of Crupper as national committeeman from Virginia, it is my belief that his defeat was brought about by a carefully planned design which brought vacillation into play and resulted in regrettable and secretive evasion of loyal obligations in some instances.

"However, the party is fortunate in sending to the national committee a tried and true Virginia Republican, who, no doubt, will carry on with energy and enthusiasm."

The new national committeeman is a former United States District Attorney for the Southern District of New York and a son of the late Gov. Wise of Virginia. He now lives on a farm on the Eastern Shore of Virginia.

With the committeeman controversy out of the way, the delegates paved the way for a showdown on the second major controversy by calling tomorrow's caucus exclusively for polling on Presidential preference.

The delegation re-elected Mrs. Murray Boocock, Keswick, as national committeewoman, and named 80-year-old S. L. Burroughs, Portsmouth, an honorary vice president of the convention in "recognition of his 51 years of service for the Republican Party.

P. P. Campbell, former member of Congress from Kansas, now an Arlington County resident, was named as the Virginia representative on the committee to notify the candidate for President, and Charles A. Hammer, Harrisonburg, was named the Virginia committeeman to notify the Vice Presidential nominee.

O'Brien Addresses Landon Graduates

The world is waiting for the young men who are ending their school careers to take charge of the industrial and social progress of the future, Robert Lincoln O'Brien, chairman of the Tariff Commission, yesterday told the graduating class at Landon School for Boys, Edgemoor, Md.

O'Brien told the young men not to be dismayed by the threats of unsettled world conditions, but to feel that they can forge ahead despite obstacles.

Among his listeners was a young man who already has overcome obstacles. Stricken with infantile paralysis, he has overcome his handicap so well that he was awarded the Carroll Mercer Marbury award for tenacity of purpose. He is Wesley Evans Buchanan, of Chevy Chase, editor of the school paper and manager of all the athletic teams of the school. George Porter, president of the graduating class, won the headmaster's medal for being outstanding in the upper school, while Philip Nash won the same award in the lower school.

McDonald Trails Hoey in N.C. Vote

Charlotte, N. C., June 10 (AP).—Complete official returns, tabulated by the Associated Press, showed tonight Clyde R. Hoey, veteran Democratic campaigner, led Dr. Ralph McDonald by 4,320 votes for Governor in Saturday's primary.

Since Hoey, State administration defender, failed by far to obtain a majority in the four-cornered race, he and McDonald, militant sales tax repealist, will enter a run-off primary July 4.

Clerks of Superior Court in each of the State's 100 counties gave the Associated Press figures which totaled: Hoey, 193,862; McDonald, 189,542; Lieut. Gov. A. H. Graham, 125,078, and John A. McRae, Charlotte attorney, 6,736.

McDonald campaigned for outright repeal of the State's $10,000,000 a year general sales tax.

Examining Board Named.

Maj. Lincoln F. Putnam, of the Medical Corps, and Maj. Francois H. K. Reynolds and Capt. Russell McNellis, both of the Veterinary Corps, were designated yesterday by the War Department to serve as a board examining District of Columbia applicants for commissions in the Army's Veterinary Corps.

Cabinet Ladies of Hoover Era Hear Him Speak at Convention

But None Greets Him at Train; Mrs. Doak Wears Sunflower; Mildred Reeves Helps Write Platform.

By the Associated Press.

Cleveland, June 10.—The "Cabinet ladies" who so often swept grandly down the White House stairs in Hoover times were here today to hear him, but not one went down to cheer his arrival at the station.

Conventioneers numbered Dolly Gann, who headed them as Vice Presidential hostess; sleek-haired, svelte Mrs. Ogden Mills (Treasury); tall, blonde Mrs. Ruth Hurley (War); aristocratic Mrs. Charles Francis Adams (Navy); fair, diminutive Mrs. William Doak, widow of the former Secretary of Labor, and scores of others close to the Cabinet circle of those days.

Wears Sunflower.

Mrs. Doak was wearing a Landon sunflower on her white sports dress. She explained:

"Mr. Hoover has no more devoted follower than I. But the chief didn't come out, and I think Landon would make a good President."

Only two women were among the police-protected Hoover welcoming committee, Mrs. James MacLafferty, of Oakland, Calif., whose former Representative husband was assistant to Hoover when he was Secretary of Commerce, and Mrs. Ebba M. Winslow, of Jamaica, N. Y. Mrs. Winslow's pass through police lines was a long-cherished letter from the White House, addressing her as "Chairman of Hoover Clubs."

She beamed because of the big flag heading the orderly welcome; the cheer that went up as Hoover came from the train; the crowds who filled concourse and street; the mounted police; the Sousa march.

On Platform Committee.

New York committee woman, Ruth Baker Pratt, former Representative, sought out Hoover in his hotel suite. Some of the New Yorkers were predicting she'd cast her first ballot for him as a gesture of loyalty.

It was new days, new ways that claimed the attention of the womenfolk at today's convention. A woman at last was on the platform committee. Fourteen new women were on the national committee—two of them in their twenties. A gentlemen's agreement was reached that there would hereafter be two women as vice chairmen instead of one.

A big afternoon tea was given by Mrs. Alvin T. Hert, for 16 years vice chairman, to get them all together in a sisterly spirit.

The first Republican woman to make the platform committee wasn't the much-rumored Alice Longworth or her friend Ruth McCormick Simms, but was the late Nicholas Longworth's young and snappy secretary, Mildred Reeves, now a lawyer in the National Capital.

Full-Time Unit Of Republican Veterans Voted

McNider Re-elected Head of Service League in Cleveland Meeting.

Cleveland, June 10 (AP).—A plan for the National Republican Service Men's League to operate continuously instead of during national campaigns only was adopted today by war veterans attendng the Republican convention.

Hanford McNider, of Iowa, former national commander of the American Legion, was re-elected president. McNider appointed James G. Frey, of Battle Creek, Mich., permanent secretary.

Within 30 days McNider will call a meeting of chairmen of existing State Republican Service Men's Clubs to complete the details of the organzation.

The services of the organzation will be offered to the Republican National Committee within the next few days.

Veterans from more than 25 States attended the meeting. McNider said 30 States were organized for the 1924 campagn and 15 States have their own leagues now.

Theodore Roosevelt told the meeting that "we fought in the war to preserve this Nation but that war was insignificant in importance compared with the battle facing us this year."

"If we are to be worthy of the title of service men now we must turn out and fight to return to America the American ideals."

Gov. Wilbur M. Brucker, of Michigan, and C. Douglas Buck, of Delaware, also urged intensive campaigns.

4 Inflation Blocs Plan Rally June 23

New York, June 10 (AP).—Dr. Francis E. Townsend announced tonight that his old-age pension organization, Father Coughlin's National Union for Social Justice, the Huey Long share the wealthers and the Lemke farm unionists will unite in a four-group political rally at Syracuse, N. Y., on June 20.

Representative William Lemke has enrolled thousands of farmers from the farm belt into a Lemke farm union organization, Dr. Townsend said.

An agreement between the Lemke group and the Townsend and Long organizations to co-operate in the indorsement and support of Congressmen, Democrat or Republican, to take Congress "out of control of the Farley-Roosevelt dictatorship," was issued by Townsend when he arrived today from Washington. He will speak at Pittsburgh Sunday.

'Rattlesnake' Slayer's Early Life Reviewed

Birmingham, Ala., June 10 (AP).—The earlier years of Robert S. James, dubbed the "Barbershop Bluebeard," passed in review here today as Los Angeles officials and a defense attorney took depositions for James' trial in the "rattlesnake" slaying of his fifth wife. James' lawyers were expected to build a defense on an insanity plea.

The prosecution contends James first subjected his wife, an expectant mother, to the bites of rattlesnakes and drowned her when poison from the reptiles was not fatal.

West Booming Col. Roosevelt For 2d Place

Cleveland, June 10.—A boom for Col. Theodore Roosevelt, of New York, for Vice President, was started quietly here tonight. Word was passed around that a secret caucus of some of the delegates from each of 15 Western States would be held tomorrow in an attempt to solidify sentiment. Some of the West Virginia delegates will join with the Westerners.

Leaders of the Roosevelt boom contended that a Roosevelt on the Republican ticket opposing his distant relative in the White House would catch the imagination of the country. The Landon followers were reported to have no objection to the move, although there was no indication that they indorsed it.

The name of William E. Borah, whose Presidential candidacy has fallen flat, also was heard. It was reported that the Idaho Senator might not be averse to the idea.

Vice Presidential booms and boomlets were sprouting all over town, but there was apparently no crystalization of sentiment. There was considerable feeling, in view of the certain Landon nomination, that the Vice Presidential candidate should come from the East, but it was not at all certain that an Easterner would be nominated.

Two men, virtually unknown to politics, were campaigning for the Vice Presidency. They were Col. Arthur D. Little, of New York, and L. A. Young, a Detroit manufacturer. Little has opened headquarters and Young was reported to be soliciting votes. Neither was conceded a chance.

Among the long list of more likely possibilities were Robert Gordon Sproul, president of the University of California; Representative Wadsworth, of New York; Senator Vandenberg (who says he will refuse the nomination), Col. Knox, Senator Steiwer, Gov. Bridges of New Hampshire, Gov. Nice of Maryland, George N. Peek, former Roosevelt AAA Administrator and now an active New Deal opponent, and Frank E. Gannett, New York publisher.

While there still is some discussion of the suggestion that the Republicans should form a coalition ticket, with a Democrat as Vice Presidential candidate, the move apparently was gaining no headway.

'36 Rally Dullest, Declares Watson

Cleveland, June 10 (AP).—Former United States Senator James E. Watson, of Indiana, who claims to have attended more national conventions than any man living, tonight described the 1936 Republican rally as "the dullest of them all."

"I have been coming to these conventions for 60 years, starting when as a boy of 11 years my father took me to that in Cincinnati in 1876," Watson said. "This is the darndest one I ever saw—and the dullest. It's because it is apparently a runaway for Gov. Landon. There is nothing to fight over. That always make a difference."

The Indianian, who was in the national Congress 40 years, said the hardest fought Republican convention was that of 1912, when he was floor leader for President Taft. Taft's opponent for the nomination was Theodore Roosevelt.

Federal Court In Texas Holds Labor Act Void

Judge Grants Utility Firm Injunction Against U.S. Relations Board.

By the Associated Press.

El Paso, Tex., June 10.—The Wagner labor relations act was declared unconstitutional today in an opinion handed down by Federal Judge Charles A. Boynton.

Granting a permanent injunction to the El Paso Electric Co. against the National Labor Board, Judge Boynton declared Congress, through the act, had "exceeded the powers vested in it" under the Constitution.

While the injunction was granted against the National Labor Board, preventing it from further investigating union complaints in the power strike here, Judge Boynton dismissed similar action filed against the regional labor board.

Judge Boynton's decision stated the utility company has shown "irreparable injury and damage" occasioned by the filing of National Labor Board complaints of "unfair labor practices" and that the company has no "adequate remedy at law."

The decision was based in part on the United States Supreme Court's outlawing of the Guffey coal act.

516 Catholic U. Graduates Hear Sen. Lonergan

The Nation's need for unselfish public service offers this year's graduate his greatest opportunity, Senator Augustine Lonergan, of Connecticut, advised 516 Catholic University graduates at their commencement yesterday.

Addressing the largest class ever graduated by the University in the presence of nearly 4,000 relatives and friends in the huge university gymnasium the Senator urged them to assume the responsibility that would most assuredly give them a place in the world.

Seldom in our country's history have we had so much need for devotion to public service. If you cannot enter officially upon some public duty, join organizations or movements honestly interested in public benefactions," Senator Lonergan urged.

He warned, however, against "bids from communists, or demagogues who do not progress logically from fundamentals, and who, more than likely, would urge you to advocate a change in our form of Government overnight."

Will Emerge Stronger.

The speaker told the graduates to go into the world confidently. "Today's graduates should entertain no fear for the fate of our country," he said. "Out of the clouds of unrest that now envelop the world our country will emerge stronger than ever. All civilization looks to us for guidance and they will not look in vain."

The faculty prosecution, forming in Caldwell Hall, proceeded to the gymnasium. The graduates in academic caps and gowns met before McMahon Hall, and joining the faculty, proceeded to the gymnasium.

The Most Rev. Michael J. Curley, Archbishop of Baltimore and chancellor of the university, presided over the exercises. The Right Rev. Joseph Corrigan, rector of the university, gave the invocation.

The valedictory was delivered by John Harold McDonald, of Culver City, Calif., who was elected to the honorary post by members of the graduating class. McDonald received dthe degree of LL. B. after taking the combined five-year arts and sciences and law courses.

Honors are Announced.

Among the honors announced in the School of Engineering and Architecture were: Ralph T. Daniel, magna cum laude; Ralph Rabenovets, cum laude; Anthony O'Hemelt, cum laude; Charles E. Berberich, cum laude; Richard J. Boyland, cum laude, all of this city; and Paul L. Gaudreau, of Baltimore, magna cum laude; William Kernan, Utica, N. Y., cum laude; Robert B. Scanland, Chevy Chase, Md., cum laude; Silvio Giovannetti, of this city, summa cum laude. In the College of Arts and Sciences the following honors were announced: Richard H. Guinan, Mahanoy City, Pa., cum laude; Bernard J. Hart, Little Falls, N. Y., cum laude; Roger O'Donoghue, this city, magna cum laude; Frederick William Ries, Bellevue, Pa., cum laude; David F. James, this city, cum laude; Bernard J. Ryan, Chateaugay, N. Y., cum laude.

Other awards announced were: A "Medal for General Excellence in Architecture," presented to Paul L. Gaudreau by the American Institute of Architects. The medal is presented annually to the outstanding student in architecture of the graduating class in each of the accredited schools of architecture in the United States.

A volume of "Mont St. Michel and Chartres," presented to John M. Baer, jr., this city, by the American Institute of Architects as the student showing the most improvement in architecture in four years, and another volume presented by the same institute to Raleigh T. Daniel, of this city, for general proficiency in architecture. Joseph A. Grand, of this city, was awarded the student medal and junior membership of the American Institute of Chemists awarded annually by the American Institute to students of outstanding character and scholarship in a selected nember of institutions.

FCC Informed A. T. & T. Rule Rests With Few

Auditor Says 5 Per Cent of Shareholders Own Half of Stock.

By the Associated Press.

The Communications Commission was told yesterday that while the American Telephone & Telegraph Co. had "more stockholders than any other corporation in the world" 5 per cent of them "owned 50 per cent of the stock."

Dr. N. R. Danielian, an accountant, testified that the huge utility, which is being investigated for possible future rate-making and regulatory purposes, had stressed the wide ownership of its stock in an effort to "build good will" with the public and to "influence legislative committees in Washington and the several States."

Answering questions of Samuel Becker, special commission counsel, Danielian said all his information had been taken from records of the company.

Concentrated in East.

These showed, he said, that stockholders in A. T. & T. increased from slightly more than 7,000 in 1900 to a peak of 701,377 in 1932 and then dipped to 664,095 in 1935.

Danielian said 382,000 stockholders owned from one to ten shares. These, he said, represented 57.5 per cent of all the stockholders, but they owned less than 10 per cent of the shares.

Most of the utility stock, he said, was "concentrated" in the financial East, with New York and Massachusetts leading in the number of stockholders.

Extracts from several speeches by Walter S. Gifford, A. T. & T. president, which were described as stressing that the "Bell system is a public utility, publicly owned," were introduced.

Danielian said:

Called Legerdemain.

"Mr. Gifford has not mentioned the fact that in all the years during which he was giving those addresses about 50 per cent of the shares of the American Co. were owned by about 5 per cent of the stockholders."

The witness said that press releases, advertisements, publications of operating companies and other means of public information also did "not give the complete picture" of stock ownership.

Numerous publications by telephone companies, stressing the stock ownership by housewives, were called "statistical jegerdemain" by Dr. Danielian.

With completion of his testimony today, the investigation was adjourned "subject to call." Commission officials said it probably would not be resumed until in fall.

Misjudging Fly Ball Proves Bit Disastrous

Special Dispatch to The Post.

Winchester, Va., June 10.—Ellis E. Bayliss, 40, Frederick County merchant, decided he'd like to play baseball again. He was assigned to the outfield. In his first game this week, he misjudged a fly ball. It struck him between the eyes, causing a bad concussion.

His condition is not serious, but he will not be in the line-up for some time, according to his physician.

Airplane Pilot Averts Poison Powder Death

New York, June 10 (AP).—Quick action by Pilot Ernest Pretsch saved him from being buried and smothered in his cockpit today by a poisonous powder he was spreading over Long Island potato fields.

Soon after he had taken off in his new crop dusting plane with 800 pounds of the powder, the tube which ejects the powder out of the bottom of the plane became clogged and the powder poured into his cockpit from a tank in the front cockpit. Within a minute it covered his legs to his knees and was climbing up around his waist.

Pretsch tore off his gas mask, shut off the dusting mcehanism and landed the plane. He was not in the poison powder long enough to suffer any bad effects.

G. W. Students Urged to Enter 'Local Politics'

Dr. Marvin Tells Graduates to End 'Confusion' in Government.

The task of college men and women today is to overcome the bewilderment that has "taken hold of the people of America," Dr. Cloyd Heck Marvin told the graduating class of George Washington University at the 115th commencement exercises of the institution in Constitution Hall last night.

"You can start at once to clarify the existing confusion," asserted Dr. Marvin.

"You can undertake the task in the only place where problems of lack of understanding can ever be truly solved—in your local political unit.

"Today a feeling is growing up that the Federal Government is the cure-all for all of our shortcomings. In some instances Federal intervention may be helpful, but I am convinced that most of today's problems of social and economic justice will be no more solved by nationalizing than the liquor question was solved by the eighteenth amendment"

The people cannot have the consciousness of being self-governed unless "they themselves attend to the immediate things that affect their own social and economic status," stated Dr. Marvin.

Three Receive Degrees.

"The only way we can have self-government in the large is first to have it in the small," concluded Dr. Marvin. "This is the basic message of the Constitution of the United States of America."

Three honorary degrees were conferred.

One went to John Henry Cowles, sovereign grand commander of the Supreme Council, Scottish Rite Masons, who received the degree of doctor of laws.

The degree of doctor of humane letters was conferred on Dr. Joseph Richard Sizoo, former pastor of New York Avenue Presbyterian Church, now at the Collegiate Church of St. Nicholas, New York City.

The third went to Charles Wendell Holmes, comptroller of George Washington University, who recently observed the fortieth anniversary of his service. He was made a doctor of laws.

Reading of a special citation honored Theodore William Noyes, publisher of the Evening Star and a trustee of the university since 1889.

Three Are Honored.

Three members of the faculty, retiring after long years of service, were made professors emeritus.

They are Lewis Francis Bradley, professor of pharmacy; Walter Collins Clephane, professor of law, and James Farnandis Mitchell, clinical professor of medicine.

Youth's Story Upheld In Songwriter's Death

Hamilton, Ohio, June 10 (AP).—A 20-year-old youth, held for the slaying of Johnny Black, 45, author of the million-dollar song hit of 1919, "Dardanella," obtained support today from three companions to his contention that he struck Black but once in a fight resulting from an argument over 25 cents in Black's "Dardanella Club."

The youth, Edward G. Moorman, of Mount Healthy, a Cincinnati suburb, faced a preliminary hearing Friday on a charge of murder. Julius Murray, also of Mount Halthy, was released on personal bond as a material witness.

LOSE FAT THE EASY WAY

Without Starvation Diets, or Back-Breaking, Banding and Rolling Exercises.

Here's a way to get rid of ugly fat that works hand in hand with Nature. Millions of people are losing millions of pounds of flabby flesh and getting back slender figures, without the need of starvation diets or back-breaking exercises.

Medical science has discovered that one of the causes of too much fat lies in a little gland. It is the duty of this tiny gland to make about one drop and a half every day of a vital fluid. This helps the body "burn" up food and excess fatty tissues just as a good draft of air helps the furnace to burn up coal without forming "clinkers." If this little gland doesn't make this drop and a half of fluid every 24 hours, many people take on ugly fat.

Doctors correct this condition by feeding this little gland the substance it lacks—and Marmola Prescription Tablets are based on this same method. Millions are using them with success. They are prepared by a world-famous medical laboratory. Their formula is published in every package so you know what you are taking.

So don't waste time and money with starvation diets or back-breaking exercises. Go to your druggist today and get a box of Marmola. Try this simple, easy way to get rid of excess fat.

For as little as $595* ... features never before offered in a car costing less than $1000!

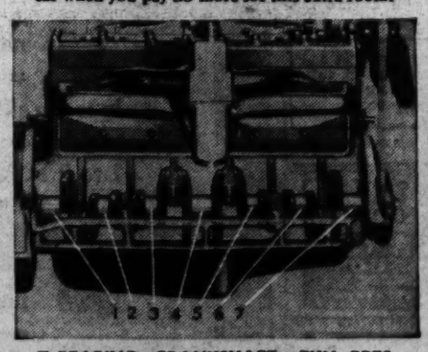
GAS-SAVING AUTOMATIC CRUISING GEAR! LaFayette and Nash "400" are the only low-priced cars that offer this sensational feature. Reduces engine revolutions ⅓ at high speeds. Minimizes wear. Saves up to 25% in gasoline; up to 50% in oil! Available at slight extra cost.

HYDRAULIC BRAKES BIG ENOUGH TO STOP A TRUCK! The largest, double-acting hydraulic brakes in relation to car weight ever put on any car at any price! And the world's first completely seamless all-steel body with steel top, sides, floor and girder-steel frame!

ENOUGH ROOM FOR A FULL-SIZE BED—without using the front seat space! Easily arranged inside any Nash "400" or LaFayette sedan in less than 10 minutes. No mattress required. Great for camping and touring. Cuts travel costs!

LOWER ... WIDER ... HARDER TO TIP OVER! Nash "400" and LaFayette are lower ... and wider between the rear wheels than other low-priced cars. That's why they hug the road; why they're the hardest cars in the world to tip over; to side-slip or skid!

MORE HEADROOM, WIDER SEATS THAN IN HIGH-PRICED CARS! Three big people ride in front or back seat with room to spare. More headroom and legroom, too, than you'll find in most high-priced cars. Why ride cooped up in a small car when you pay no more for this extra room?



7-BEARING CRANKSHAFT—FULL-PRESSURE LUBRICATION! These are just two of the vital, long-life engineering features that other manufacturers leave out of their low-priced cars, but praise in their higher-priced cars! No wonder Nash "400" and LaFayette last longer, run "sweeter" for thousands of additional miles!

One-Girl Class Has Hollywood Diploma at 18

Anne Shirley, in Pictures All Her Life, Attends Mailbox Graduation.

By the United Press.

Hollywood, June 10.—Red-haired Anne Shirley, at 18, Hollywood's youngest "adult" film actress, is about to graduate from high school, and pretty proud of it, too.

"Education," said Anne guilelessly, as she waited for the postman to bring her diploma, "is a fine thing to have—behind you."

It will be a one-girl graduation class, with no speeches, no music and no filmy frocks, for Anne, who debuted in pictures at 3 and has been before cameras more or less ever since, finished her high school work with a tutor between takes of "Anne of Green Gables," and "Chatterbox," in which she played leads.

"I guess I wouldn't have much use for a graduation dress," she said. "I could only wear it to the mailbox. But I'm going to have a diploma. Lawlor's Professional School is giving it to me. I went there two years before I got too busy."

Anne explained solemnly that she studied general science, French, English and English history her last semester. ("I was never much good at mathematics. English is my best subject.")

She plans to "go to college" with a tutor beginning next fall, but her classrooms will still be sound stages and dressing rooms, without campus, football teams, sororities or junior proms.

"But I can go to football games if I want to, and dance at the Trocadero. That's just the same, isn't it?"

Madeline's Marital Pact.

Madeline Carroll says she has a semi annual visitation pact with her husband, Capt. Philip Astely of his majesty's life guards, London, because absence does not make hearts grow fonder when one of them is in Hollywood.

"In Hollywood the disastrous results of long separations are apparent everywhere," she explained, "and the thought of always being 6,000 miles away from my husband is a little terrifying. We have agreed never to be apart longer than six months."

Not Doves of Peace.

Two hundred doves blighted the Frank Capra boast that no temperamental display ever marred a Capra production. The director used the doves in a scene with Elizabeth Jewell and Thomas Mitchell in "Lost Horizon," but having done their stuff they refused to be captured. Attempts to drive the doves away made them angry, and they ruined 12 subsequent scenes with their protests.

Claude Rains, who refuses to live in Hollywood, must resume commuting between the film capital and his farm near Philadelphia almost immediately. He is cast as male lead (a jaunty Parisian financier) opposite Kay Francis in "Mistress of Fashion."

FrontRoyalWoman Elected by W. M. U.

Martinsburg, W. Va., June 10.—Mrs. O. W. Borden, of Front Royal, Va., was re-elected superintendent of the Woman's Missionary Union of the Shenandoah Association of the Baptist Church at the annual session held at First Baptist Church here yesterday with more than 50 delegates attending.

Miss Camilla Wiltshire, of Leetown, was elected secretary-treasurer; Mrs. W. B. Pendleton, Charles Town, secretary of stewardship; Mrs. Louise Kerfott, of Berryville, Va., mission study chairman, and Mrs. Smith Pine, of Martinsburg, young people's director.

The 1937 meeting, to occur some time in June, will be held in Luray, Va.

Addresses by Mrs. G. R. Martin, president of the Woman's Missionary Union of the Virginia Baptist Association and former president of the Virginia Federation of Woman's Clubs, were outstanding in the program for the day.

Responding to Mrs. Borden's report during the morning Mrs. Martin spoke on "After 50 Years," reviewing briefly the work of the union, which was organized 50 years ago. Later she spoke on the history of missions.

Ladies of First Baptist Church served lunch for the visitors.

Army Officers Study Antietam Battlefield

Hagerstown, June 1 (AP).—More than 100 officers from the Army War College today visited Antietam battlefield and made a study of the terrain as a part of their course on the conduct of the Civil War.

Their buses swung over the field via Burnside Bridge, Mansfield avenue, the Smoketown road and Bloody lane in order to fix the strategic locations in the minds of the students. They then proceeded to the observation tower, where, with the aid of an amplifying system, the battle was described by Maj. F. P. Hardaway, U. S. Coast Artillery Corps. Following lunch at the Philadelphia Brigade Park, the party left for Harpers Ferry.

'Victim' Confesses 'Holdup' Was a Fake

Special Dispatch to The Post.

Fredericksburg, Va., June 10.—Mack McGee, of this city, who reported to police Saturday night that he was knocked in the head by a colored man and a white man, who robbed him of $21, is said to have confessed to local police that it did not take place.

According to a report of Officer A. G. Kendall, McGee "confessed he was not robbed but had some trouble with a friend whom he did not wish to get into trouble."

Flounces Around With Lewis Band

This beruffled and unruffled young woman, if you can handle a bit of a paradox, is Edna, a limb of the Strong family tree, who dances with the Ted Lewis Band, coming to the Earle Theater tomorrow to provide the stage portion of the bill featured, on the screen, by Joe E. Brown in "Sons o' Guns." This alliterative Mr. Lewis denominates his stage divertissement a "Rhythm Rhapsody Revue," whatever that may be. Miss Strong is only one of his stellar specialists—but what a one!

Movie Boners.

Hollywood, June 10.

There must be rules for the contestants while they are playing movie boners. At least, that is what Samuel Nochimson believes, and he writes: "This is to inform you that you have promoted, if not initiated, an indoor sport which will have bad results if a committee on rules is not immediately appointed.

IRENE DUNNE.

"Those movie boner addicts. They believe in giving audible and vehement expression to any flaw they see; an ostensibly enjoyable evening at the cinema was ruined the other evening by a couple sitting behind me. Each was desirous of discovering a boner first, and telling of his success to his companion.

"Every sport I know is governed by regulations which tend to equalize the competition and limit the bounds. Football, baseball, boxing, croquet and ping pong all have limiting regulations. Why not a set of rules for movie boners?"

Rule: Movie boners are not to be read aloud in a theater the way that subtitles used to be.

The flicker is "Show Boat," and Joe Ryan, who admits that he worked in a theater where it was being shown, claims a boner in the sequence in which Allan Jones and Irene Dunne are riding in the old-fashioned automobile. Jones is wearing goggles up until the time of the backfire, and then he is shown without the glasses. They are there for one shot and have disappeared for the next. Movie magic.

* * * *

A movie boner from the flicker "The Case Against Mrs. Ames," with Madeline Carroll and George Brent, writes Violet Carena, is in the scene in the little cafeteria when Brent and Carroll are discussing the case. There are two other characters in the scene, the butler and Miss Carroll's uncle. The line spoken by Brent is: "Madeline, a delay is the only possibility that we have to win the case."

The name of Madeline Carroll in the flicker, states Miss Carena, is Hope Ames. Yet, in this scene, George Brent called her Madeline.

This type of boner, calling a player by his regular name instead of the story name, often creeps into a picture. Here is a letter from Robert Mulligan, who writes that he is a member of the cast of the play, "Dead End," and submits this flicker flaw:

"I caught a showing of 'Bullets or Ballots' at the Strand, and believe I detected a prize boner. My old pal, Barton MacLane, in a sequence in which he dismisses his henchmen, has one of them distinctly calling, 'So long, Bart.' Bart plays A. Kruger. This extra believes, evidently, in realism." Or maybe he's a member of the Movie Boners Club trying to get new members.

Huntzler Granted New Liquor Trial

Special Dispatch to The Post.

Winchester, Va., June 10.—As a result of a writ of error granted by the Virginia Supreme Court of Appeals at Wytheville, the case of Ray Hutzler, convicted of possession of alleged illegal liquor, is again headed for local court.

Hutzler was convicted by Trial Justice A. J. Tavenner and appealed to Circuit Court, where the decision was upheld. He then appealed to the Court of Appeals.

Hutzler's attorney contends that although the State proved he had illegal liquor, it does not prove where he obtained it. It is contended by the defense that he obtained it in West Virginia and that, under the A. B. C. laws of Virginia, the liquor cannot be classed as illegal in Virginia for the reason it was obtained outside the State.

Spottsylvania Lays High Carnival Tax

Special Dispatch to The Post.

Fredericksburg, Va., June 10.—Carnivals showing in Spottsylvania County in the future must pay a tax of $100 a day it was decided by the supervisors of the county at a meeting yesterday.

The action came as a result of a carnival last week on show grounds adjacents to this city, located in Spottsylvania, which featured a show described as "filthy and obscene."

Fredericksburg some months ago placed a high tax on carnivals showing here because of the large amount of money that they took away from the city. They sought refuge in nearby Spottsylvania where there was no tax. Yesterday's action is expected to keep them out of this section entirely as the tax is out of reach of most traveling carnivals, it was said.

The Spottsylvania action does not apply to fairs and circuses. A tax on these is expected to be fixed later.

Special Dispatch to The Post.

La Plata, Md., June 10.—At the annual Class Night exercises at La Plata High School last night, Frank Goldsmith and Evangeline Cooksey were the winners in the declamation contest. Other contestants were Mera Turner, Mary Anne McDowel, Cecelia Anne Burch, John H. Stone, John White and Ridgley Cooksey.

Miss Cooksey, as winner for the grils' group, received the Halley Medal, donated by Richard H. Halley, cashier of the local branch of the County Trust Co., while Goldsmith received the Digges Medal, donated by the family of the late Chief Judge W. Mitchell Digges of the Seventh Judicial Circuit.

The Federal Diary

Registered in U. S. Patent Office

By Betty Read.

With Congressional appropriations instead of relief money as its working basis, the Soil Conservation Service becomes the first emergency agency to attain a permanent Government status and thereby one of the two largest bureaus in the Department of Commerce.

This is the surface observation on the change, but its effect is far reaching, for it will mean considerable additional employment in its ranks, a definite plan of work for at least five years in the future and an avenue for experts in Government service instead of temporary relief labor.

Henry D. Abbott, assistant chief of the service, yesterday commented on the new possibilities now open for work in stopping soil erosion and the other duties of the service.

Standards Raised.

"Putting the service on a permanent basis has raised our standards, for the main consideration is the value of the work, present and future, rather than providing a constructive means for relief work or flash-in-the-pan job," he said.

"We can attract to our work now, men and women whose professions are the sciences with which we deal. Before this time, when we were considered an emergency agency, this type of worker was rare and we did not get ones who would give up a permanent job elsewhere to add to the efficiency of Government service.

"The whole feeling in the service has altered overnight. The feeling of possible impermanence has gone. Although we always worked with the idea that we were a permanent group, there was always an element of uncertainty."

But actually, the big change will come in employment. Under the old rules, which go out with the beginning of the fiscal year July 1, relief money was used for the work. About 90,000 CCC boys and nearly 23,000 WPA workers were used for the Soil Conservation Service, which provided a way of keeping them busy.

Some of the relief money for soil conservation was used to hire 6,500 people in supervisory and administrative jobs. The Congressional appropriation will continue this force but, in addition, many of those people, familiar with soil erosion work who have been paid a security wage under the WPA, will be transferred to the pay rolls of the Soil Conservation.

Many Advantages.

"The situation sums up into this," said one of the officials," in addition to the workers who have always been available, we now have a Congressional appropriation almost as large as our old budget and have all the advantages of being a permanent organization.

"There is no reason why we should not continue to have WPA workers like the permanent Forestry Service has. 'We rank high as a medium of employing relief workers.'"

Under relief funds, the service had a budget of approximately $27,000,000. Under Congressional appropriation is has been cut to about $23,000,000.

The only other bureau in the department of similar size is the Forestry Service.

Explaining the work of the service, Abbott said that 36,000 miles of farm terraces have been built—enough to reach between New York and Los Angeles six times. These terraces, it was explained, are somewhat like ditches built on farm hillsides to retain the rain waters and keep the soil from being washed from the high places into the valleys.

By agreement with the farmers, the service people map out a five-year plan of soil erosion prevention for individual farmers. This includes such things as terracing, strip cropping or planting of forage crops at strategic points to prevent erosion, flood control, tree planting which encourages wild life and nurseries for the raising of trees and suitable grasses.

Alabamans to Picnic.

Pack a lunch basket, bring the children and friends and be at the Seventh street wharf at 5 o'clock tomorrow, all you members of the Alabama Society, for this is one of the gala occasions of the year. It's a boat ride and picnic and the destination is Marshall Hall Park, where ice cream and lemonade is free and where the pavilion has been reserved for dancing for the Alabama Society members exclusively. There's to be dancing on the return boat trip.

A lot of grievances dealing with dismissals and hours of duty have to be ironed out as much as possible tonight at the bimonthly meeting of the Resettlement Lodge, 206, American Federation of Government Employes.

"There has been generel gossip around the Resettlement Administration that there are to be drastic cuts in personnel," said Mrs. Janet Gaines, of the legal department, president of the lodge," the dismissals have already begun and the procedure is not in keeping with a policy we were asked to formulate two months ago by the Administration officials.

"We asked for dismissal on the basis of efficiency and seniority, written notice of one month or a minimum of two weeks, exclusive of accrued leave, but in the ones that have come to our attention, these conditions have not been followed."

The meeting will also take up the matter of compensation for overtime work about which Mrs. Gaines said the lodge and the officials had reached an agreement which has been violated.

Professor Threaten; Police Seize Man, 40

New York, June 10 (AP).—Michael Opolonick, 40, was arrested today in connection with the receipt of threatening letters by several Fordham University factulty members. He was turned over to Federal authorities.

He claims to be a graduate chemist and recently took postgraduate work at Fordham. When the examinations were held Opolonick failed to pass. Shortly afterward members of the faculty having connection with classes in chemistry began receiving anonymous letters of a threatening tone.

Culbertson on Bridge

Skill, Clairvoyance, or Luck?

Boston takes its contract seriously, as is befitting the traditional American center of culture and learning. I am in receipt of a letter from one of the outstanding experts in that territory, Thomas H. Peebles, asking my opinion as to the merits of a certain play by another expert, M. E. White.

I quote: "The bidding and play of the hand are given 'as is.' The unsolved argument between the declarer, his partner, his opponents and sundry kibitzers as to whether it was luck that won the hand or skill and science, is passed along for your comments. The only point on which we all agree is that Mr. White habitually walks off with both profits and prizes."

This was the hand:

South, dealer.
Both sides vulnerable.

The bidding:

South	West	North	East
2 dimds.	Pass	2 no trp.	Pass
3 spades	Pass	3 no trp.	Pass
4 clubs	Pass	4 dimds.	Pass
5 clubs	Pass	6 clubs	Pass
Pass	Double	Pass	Pass
Redouble	Pass	Pass	Pass

West opened the king of hearts and Mr. White made the remarkable play of discarding a small spade from his own hand. West then shifted to the jack of diamonds, which declarer won, after which he ran off every trump and every diamond. At this point, a squeeze developed against West. With the necessity for discarding down to three cards, he found himself somewhat hard pressed to keep both the ace of hearts and three spades to stop South's suit. Thus, the contract was made. Now I quote Mr. Peebles again:

"To the direct question: 'Didn't you mean to ruff the first lead with the deuce of clubs and didn't you accidentally pull a spade?' Mr. White not only refused to volunteer the requested information, but blandly smiles and replies: 'Ask Mr. Culbertson how else I could have made the hand.' As this naturally leaves us kibitzers out in left field, we appeal to you for a decision."

"I am quite sure that my decision will be a severe shock to Mr. Peebles and his cohorts! Because, this time, they've run up against a real mirage.

"I don't blame Mr. White's critics for scoffing, because I scoffed myself at first glance. The superficial analysis is that declarer's play of passing the first trick was ridiculous, in that it prepared for a squeeze that could operate only if West had four or five spades, and abandoned the chance for contract on more probable distribution. Ah! but let's look a little deeper!

To ruff the opening lead would be, in effect, to depend on a 3-3 trump break! (Declarer would be reduced to four trumps if he ruffed the first lead, and would have to ruff again after playing three rounds of spades.) Moreover, if the spades were split badly (5-1) this plan automatically would fail. The odds against Mr. White's plan were about 7 to 3, but if his plan failed, he would be down only one trick (400 points), whereas if the "obvious" plan failed, the penalty would be 1,000 or 1,600 points.

My conclusion is that since Mr. White was in the contract of six clubs redoubled, vulnerable (instead of the obviously correct contract of six diamonds!) his play was eminently correct!

Today's Question.

Question: If a player has "stretched" his hand by bidding the maximum on a minimum hand, can he sign off to an asking bid even though holding the requirements for a positive response?

Answer: No. When holding the requirements for a positive response, partner must respond even though he has stretched his previous bids.

Tomorrow's Hand.

Attractive Film Bills Promised For Next Week

Stage Acts Also Present Strong Opposition to the Out-of-Doors.

"Fury," a drama of such tumultuous content as to justify its place among the most discussed films of the present year, will be seen for the first time on a Washington screen as chief feature of the bill at Loew's Palace Theater for the week beginning tomorrow. The principal roles in this powerful assault upon the disgraceful national stigma of lynch law and mob rule are played by Spencer Tracy and Sylvia Sydney, supported by Walter Abel, Bruce Cabot, Edward Ellis, Frank Albertson, Walter Brennan and George Walcott. While assailing an intolerable condition with courage and conviction, "Fury" also provides dramatic entertainment of the first rank, its story compounding one situation of emotional intensity after another in unbroken sequence. The bill will be completed by the customary short-reel subjects and Metrotone News.

Joe E. Brown will be the pictured star of the bill announced for the week beginning tomorrow at the Warner Brothers' Earle Theater in "Sons o' Guns," a screen version of the stage success of the same name. With Joan Blondell opposite the star and Wini Shaw, Beverly Roberts, Eric Blore, Joseph King and Craig Reynolds in support, the heights of comedy and music may be promised in this ridiculous yarn of a doughboy in the Great War. On the stage the living diversion will be supplied by Ted Lewis and his band of 30 instrumentalists and specialty artists in what he is pleased to term a "Rhythm Rhapsody Revue." Nascha, Hawaiian dancer; Edna Strong, Cralie "Snowball" Whittier and the Hi-Hatters are among his entertainers of note. Newsreel and Freddie Clark's Orchestra will round out the program.

In "Forgotten Faces," chief screen feature of the bill beginning tomorrow at Loew's Fox Theater, the foremost roles are played by Herbert Marshall and Gertrude Michael. The story of the picture concerns the efforts of a father to protect his young daughter against the threat of a conscienceless woman. James Burkom, Robert Cummings, Jane Rhodes, Robert Gleckler and Arthur Hohl are foremost among the supporting cast. An old Washington favorite returns to coheadline the stage bill in the person of Herb Williams, drollest of the stages's contemporary comedians, who will share honors with Yascha Bunchuk's Symphony Orchestra. Herb Williams will be supported, as usual, by Doris Ewing and his band of stooges. Other acts will be presented by Gold and Bernie, song and dance artists, and the Dalong Sisters in an acrobatic revue. Yascha Bunhuk's Symphony Orchestra of 60 and Talbot Haslett, vocalist, will be held over for a second week.

Margaret Lindsay and Glenda Farrell appear in the pivotal roles of "The Law In Her Hands," chief screen feature of the bill announced for the week beginning tomorrow at the Metropolitan Theater. In this new First National comedy-drama, important supporting roles are played by Lyle Talbot, Warren William, Eddie Acuff and Dick Purcell. The story concerns the adventures of two girls who undertake to handle a racketeer's case before a district attorney they believe has attempted to "frame" them. Short subjects and full newsreel will be added.

Having established itself as one of the most delightfully entertaining comedy-romances of the season, "Small Town Girl," costarring Janet Gaynor and Robert Taylor, will continue for a second week at the Columbia Theater, where it is repeating the success achieved during the earlier fortnight's run at the Palace. The supplementary attractions also will be held over.

Alfred Lunt and Lynn Fontanne in "The Guardsman," their first and only picture, and the governmentally sponsored "The Plow That Broke the Plains," will be continued for a second week as twin features of the bill at the Belasco Theater. These two subjects, the former a revival, are supplemented by abbreviated camera subjects of appropriate nature and the Pathe News.

With public enthusiasm over its many superlative qualities still undiminished, Universal's splendid new picturizaiton of Edna Ferber's "Show Boat" sails triumphantly into its fourth week at RKO-Keith's, with Irene Dunne starred in the role of Magnolia. Among the supporting players are Charles Winninger, Helen Morgan, Paul Robeson, Sammy White, Queenie Smith, Helen Westley and scores of others of like standing.

Following the current engagement of "Smilin' Thru," with Norma Shearer, Fredric March and Leslie Howard, the Little Theater, beginning on Sunday, will present as its major attraction "Flying Down to Rio," with Fred Astaire and Ginger Rogers dancing the "Carioca" and Dolores Del Rio, Gene Raymond and Raul Roulien playing the principal dramatic roles. Gertrude Niesen also sings in this picture.

Glen Echo Park, Washington's nearby amusement center high above the Potomac in Maryland, with more than 50 amusements in full summertime operation, is attracting the largest crowds in its history. Favorites among the many attractions are the Crystal Pool, one of the finest natatoriums in the East; the Spanish Garden Ballroom, with music by Dave McWilliams 12-piece orchestra; the "Drive 'Em Yourself" motorboats, Midway and exciting rides, some of which soar among the treetops. Picnic parties are accommodated weekly in large numbers.

Seaside Park, on the Bay at Chesapeake Beach, Md., is in full swing, with a variety of aquatic sports, including boating and fishing and a salt-water bathing pool. Dancing is among the popular recreations and fine facilities are afforded for outing parties.

The daily river trips and moonlight cruises of the Steamer City of Washington of the Wilson Line are enticing capacity crowds away from the heat of the city to the cool, fresh air of the Potomac and the diverse amusements of Marshall Hall Park. The City of Washington provides four spacious decks for the comfort of passengers, with dancing and other amusements aboard.

About the Showshops

THIS being the month of sales conventions and new season's product announcements, the trade journals of the motion picture industry are beginning to bulge with the multi-colored advertising inserts of the major producing companies. They promise a wealth of entertainment fit to assuage the acquisitive instincts of an amusement Midas and splash verbal as well as lithographic color all over the place. The surprising part of it all is that in all probability a majority of these flamboyant boasts will come true. The cinema is coming to be like that.

BELL.

I have been particularly interested in the modest declarations of the Gaumont British company, England's most potent threat to the preeminence of Hollywood as the source of all that is best in filmdom. GB, which, of course, might also be construed as meaning Great Britain, is using the famous line "The sun never sets on GB as its trade slogan. It also sets down that it is "the largest employer of manpower in the entertainment world," keeping "15,000 people on the permanent pay roll 52 weeks in the year, outside of production." That is an important item in any appraisal of the company's power as an active factor in a mercurial and mighty industry.

Even more interesting to our celluloid West Coast is the roster of players to be seen in the 24 feature pictures planned by Gaumont British for the 1936-37 release schedule. There is quite a measure of balm here, if any is needed, for American interests, for an even half of the GB stars and featured players either are American or builded their screen reputations almost exclusively in American-made films.

These 14, out of a total of 28, are George Arliss, Constance Bennett, Victor McLaglen, Sylvia Sidney, Edmund Lowe, Helen Vinson, Richard Arlen, Constance Cummings, Clive Brook, Nils Asther, Douglass Montgomery, Noah Beery, Roland Young and Ernest Truex. Out of these 14, in turn, almost half are foreign born, a majority English.

Sort of a "hands across the seize," as you might say! Or might not.

If any doubt has lingered in any mind as to the picture-going public's enthusiasm over good music, it must have been effectively dispelled by this week's engagement of Yascha Bunchuk and his Symphony Orchestra of 60 pieces at Loew's Fox Theater.

Such ovations have greeted the work of this hastily assembled group of musicians at every performance since last Friday's opening that the management has been impelled to continue the musical innovation through a second week beginning tomorrow. An entirely new program, of course, will be presented; is already in rehearsal, in fact. It will have as its major numbers Victor Herbert's "Pan Americana", Iwanow's "Caucasian Sketches", Rimsky-Korsakow's "Flight of the Bumble Bee" and Tschaikowski's "March Slav", with a special symphonic arrangement of "The Carioca" as an encore.

The item of expense obviously is a prohibitive factor, but the thought still persists that a solution of the vaudeville problem—constantly growing more and more acute—might be found in the substitution of permanent symphonic organizations for the present hit-and-run variety programs on the stage of the so-called picture houses. The audible screen, somehow, never has succeeded quite in taking the place of a good pit orchestra of living instrumentalists.

Paramount News pictures of the Republican National Convention in Cleveland were on the screens of the Warner Brothers' Earle and Metropolitan theaters yesterday. Included are various views of the convention hall, the delegates, the various speakers, a large corps of newspaper people, covering the quadrennial event, and similar interesting features.

And the telegraph wires are not idle, either. Positively greatest show ever produced in a Washington night club. Regards."

So, finally, we shall see how Ann would have looked in "The Great Ziegfeld", had her numbers not been left on the cutting-room floor, along with Leon Errol and some others who should have been kept in.

Gene Tunney and Rudy Vallee, in separate fields, are more alike than any others I can call to mind . . . Tex Rickard and Florenz Ziegfeld were carved from the same limb of the Barnum family tree . . . Ashton Stevens' description of Nora Bayes is the greatest I've ever heard: "She had a bronze voice" . . . John Barrymore was rejected for Army service in 1917 because of varicose veins . . . Deak Aylesworth, N. B. C. big shot, is a Cedar Rapids, Iowa, boy who made good . . . Bill Paley, C. B. S. head man, originated in Chicago . . . WOR's Alfred McCosker, WHN's Louis K. Sidney and WMCA's Donald Flamm are rarest of citizens . . . They were all born in New York City . . . McCosker is a Greenwich Villager, attended St. Joseph's School with Jimmy Walker, and his first job was office boy to Arthur Brisbane . . . Understand Frank Fay slugged Robert Taylor on the Vallee broadcast.

Ted Lewis is the only big-name performer who remains a great box office draw without radio support . . . Will Rogers was the only flicker star whose pictures, released after his death, made fabulous money . . . Colored bands refer to each other as "cats;" the usual salutation of one band to another: "Where you cats been squawling?" . . . Meaning where have they been playing? . . . Colored dancers refer to each other as "scufflers" . . . Pops, of Pops and Louie, calls his partner Fascinatin' Caesar, which to me is a new high in original baptism . . . I'll bet the Hudson River ferryboats sulk when the Normandie or Queen Mary comes into New York Harbor, the big exhibitionists . . . Oftenest used line from now on: "Ouch, I'm sunburned."

Spencer Tracy's uncompromising performance in "Fury" is the best thing to come to the screen since Victor McLaglen's artistry in "The Informer" . . . This is the time of the year when you think of Lake Louise, in the Canadian Rockies . . . Performer who got the maximum publicity on the minimum performance: Doris Dudley . . . It is significant that she is managed by Katharine Hepburn's pilot, Leland Hayward . . . . Loveliest of the screen images, Loretta Young . . . Walter Huston and W. C. Fields have the same rasp in their voices, vocal heritage of one-night stands in seamier days . . . Merle Oberon, who arrived in flickers with a reputation as a heart-cracker-upper, is the best beloved minx in the industry . . . A. C. Blumenthal should have been born in Washington, D. C.

Conferees Fail To Effect Pact For Levy Plan

Senate and House Members Report 'No Progress' on Corporate Tax.

Senate and House conferees, trying to unscramble the conflicting provisions of the tax bill and to bring out an acceptable compromise, put in another dreary day of negotiations yesterday, then reported "no substantial progress."

"We did agree on a few minor administrative and perfecting amendments," said Chairman Doughton (Democrat), North Carolina, of the House Ways and Means Committee, "but, otherwise, we only considered the bill generally and laid a basis for future discussions. We did not get to the corporation tax at all. I was in hopes we might take it up at this meeting, but now it appears we will not get to it until the end of the week."

The conference committee was in session for more than three hours. Senate members left shortly after noon, but the House conferees remained in session throughout the day. The discussion centered on the 289 amendments which the Senate tacked on to the House bill, it was learned.

Members were reluctant to discuss what went on in the meeting. "The committee tied our hands," said Representative Samuel B. Hill (Democrat), of Washington. Several indicated, however, that they felt a compromise eventually would be reached, with the House provisions predominating.

There appeared little likelihood that a complete agreement on the bill would be reached until Republican conferees return from the national convention in Cleveland. Representative Crother (Republican), of New York, was the only minority member who remained in the Capital for the conference.

The House bill provides for a graduated tax up to 42½ per cent on undistributed corporate profits based on the amount withheld from dividends, while the Senate measure lays down a flat 7 per cent levy.

The conferees will meet again today.

12 From District Graduate at U. of P.

Philadelphia, Pa., June 10 (AP).—Ten students from Maryland and 12 from Washington were among the 1,500 young men and women graduated today from the University of Pennsylvania.

Alexander H. Van Keuren, jr., of Chevy Chase, who received the degree of bachelor of architecture, won the graduate scholarship in architecture, the American Institute of Architects medal for having the highest record in his class, the architectural ornament and archeology prize medal, and the T Square Club prize for meritorious scholarship and all around ability.

Dr. James Grafton Rogers, master of Timothy Dwight College, Yale University, delivered the commencement address and received an honorary degree of doctor of laws.

Graduates from this vicinity were:

B. & O. Traffic Up 44% at Cut Rate

New York, June 10 (AP).—Silence pervaded all but one of the major Eastern railroad offices today on the question of whether lower fares, ordered into effect ten days ago by the Interstate Commerce Commission, had resulted in an increase or a decrease of passenger revenues.

The exception was the Baltimore & Ohio, which reported a rise of nearly 44 per cent in the number of passengers carried in the New York district and a revenue gain of 28 to 30 per cent.

The B. & O. was the only major line not to contest the rate cut order. Twenty-nine other railroads, including the New York Central, Pennsylvania, New York, Chicago & St. Louis and Chesapeake & Ohio, have joined in a suit to restrain the commission from enforcing its order.

Baltimore headquarters of the B. & O. emphasized that no definite conclusions could be drawn at this stage.

Hoover Awarded Degree by N. Y. U.

New York, June 10 (AP).—J. Edgar Hoover, director of the Bureau of Investigation of the Department of Justice, and eight other persons received honorary degrees today at the 104th commencement of New York University.

Degrees were awarded to 4,206 men and women.

Among others who received honorary degrees were Lucrezia Bori, soprano of the Metropolitan Opera Company, and Abraham Flexner, director of the Institute for Advanced Studies.

Chancellor Harry Woodburn Chase of the university told Hoover, in conferring the degree, "John Edgar Hoover, G-man No. 1, you are rendering a public service to this country."

M. C. Glenn, Railway Official, Succumbs

San Diego, Calif., June 9 (AP).—Miles C. Glenn, 68, of Greensboro, N. C., assistant superintendent of the Southern Railway, died here today at the home of his daughter, Mrs. T. W. Hardie. Glenn and his wife left Greensboro a week ago.

Besides his wife and Mrs. Hardie, he is survived by two other daughters, Mrs. Margaret Griffin, of Rocky Mount, N. C.; Mrs. Nell Scott, of Greensboro, and a son, Ben D. Glenn, of New York. The body will be taken to Greensboro for burial.

Text of President Roosevelt's Speech at Little Rock

By the Associated Press.

Little Rock, Ark., June 10 (AP).—Following is the text of President Roosevelt's speech at the Arkansas Centennial celebration today:

For me this has been a glorious day. While I have been in Arkansas before, my visits have been too much like those of a bird of passage, and this is the first chance I have had to see the State at closer range, and especially to enjoy the generosity, the kindness and the courtesy of true Arkansas hospitality.

I have seen your parks—I have seen the beauty of your mountains and rivers. Arkansas can claim every warrant for the name "Wonder State." It is doubly a privilege to meet you face to face and to join with you in the celebration of the one-hundredth anniversary of the admission of this great State into the Union.

Possibly our citizens who live in the original Thirteen States along the Atlantic may have the natural idea that white men first became acquainted with their part of the country, and that the territory west of the Mississippi is all very new.

I am certain it is not generally realized that Hernando De Soto, the tireless Spanish explorer, set foot in what is now Arkansas, as early as 1541, more than half a century before the founding of Jamestown and New Amsterdam and Plymouth; nor the fact the French explorers, Marquette and Jolet, coming southward from Canada, saw this country when the civilization of the Atlantic seaboard was still in its infancy. Nor have they sufficiently been told that the first settlement under the flag of France was made under the direction of De Tonti at Arkansas Post as far back at 1686.

Purchased by United States.

First under the flag of France, the young settlement passed to the flag of Spain, to be recovered by Napoleon for France in 1800, and finally brought under our own American flag by the Louisiana Purchase in 1803.

That Louisiana Purchase has always had a special significance for me. I am interested in it for family reasons, because Robert R. Livingston, our Minister to France, negotiated the purchase by direction of President Thomas Jefferson—and I must admit that he drove a very shrewd bargain.

I am also interested because President Jefferson, seeing the complexities which the Emperor Napoleon faced in a coalition of hostile European powers, had the courage to act for the benefit of the United States without the full and unanimous approval of every member of the legal profession.

He was told by some of his closest advisers and friends that the Constitution of the United States contained no clause authorizing him to purchase or acquire additional territory, and that because specific authority did not exist under that great charter of government, none could be exercised.

Jefferson replied that there were certain inherent qualities of sovereignty which could not be separated from a federal government, if such a federal government was permanently to endure; furthermore, if he delayed the Emperor of the French might change his mind and the great territory west of the Mississippi be lost to American expansion.

He and Robert R. Livingston put the treaty through; the next Congress appropriated the money; nobody carried the case to the Supreme Court; and, as a result, Louisiana and Arkansas and Missouri and Iowa and Minnesota and Kansas and Montana and North Dakota and South Dakota and the larger portions of Wyoming and Colorado and Nebraska and Oklahoma fly the Stars and Stripes today.

The hardy pioneers who peopled Arkansas and laid the foundations for Statehood here and throughout the vast new domain west of the Alleghanies, brought about a veritable renaissance of free government upon which this republic was founded.

I have not the time, nor is it necessary to follow the fascinating story in detail down to the admission of Arkansas into the Union only a few days less than 100 years ago. That year of attainment of Statehood by Arkansas is an important one in American history, not so much because it was marked by a Presidential election but because 1836 was the last full year of the Presidency of Andrew Jackson.

Historical Significance.

It is not without the greatest historical significance that Arkansas was received into the Union in 1836. Jackson's great work for the country was approaching completion. He was in the full tide of his remarkable powers and in the exercise of an extraordinary influence upon the minds and opinions of the mass of his countrymen.

When Arkansas became a State our National Government was not quite 50 years old. Charles Carroll, of Carrollton, the last surviving signer of the Declaration of Independence, had been dead only four years. But six years had passed since Webster had delivered the reply to Hayne. Men who had followed Washington through the Revolution were to be found in every community, and the manners and mode of the pioneer period were the order of American life.

Andrew Jackson, the contemporary and counsellor of the Arkansas pioneers of 1836, made his home across the Mississippi in the neighboring State of Tennessee, and was known to the Arkansans of that day as a fellow frontiersman who had carried into the Presidency those neighborly instincts of the frontier which made possible the first truly Democratic Administration in our history.

Stagnation Halted.

The older I grow and the more I read history, the more I reflect upon the influence of the men and events of one generation upon the life and thought of the generations that follow. A hundred years have passed since Arkansas attained Statehood in that last year of Jackson's presidency, but throughout this century our American political life has flowed with the vigor of a living stream because the sturdy hand of Andrew Jackson deflected its course from the stagnant marshes of a seaboard oligarchy into the channels of pure American democracy.

Prior to Jackson's day it may be said, without danger of exaggeration, that the leadership of the Nation was, with rare exceptions, in the hands of men who, by birth or education, belonged to a comparatively small group—for the reason we have not far to seek. Universal education was not yet fully established; communication difficulties prevented the dissemination of news except in the larger communities and along the main avenues of transportation; the very ballot was, in many States, limited to those with special property qualifications.

The wave of popular acclaim that swept Andrew Jackson into his high office was the result of the recognition by the people of the United States that the era of a truer democracy in their national life was at hand. I need not describe the dismay that the election of Jackson excited—and honestly excited—in the hearts of the hitherto elect or the widespread apprehension that it aroused among the so-called "guardian groups" of the Republic.

Groups such as these have never wholly disappeared from American political life, but it will never be possible for any length of time for any group of the American people, either by reason of wealth or learning or inheritance or economic power, to retain any mandate, any permanent authority to arrogate to itself the political control of American public life.

People Rule Own Destiny.

This heritage we owe to Jacksonian Democracy—the American doctrine that entrusts the general welfare to no one group or class, but dedicates itself to the end that the American people shall not be thwarted in their high purpose to remain the custodians of their own destiny.

The frontier spirit which brought men into the Arkansas wilderness, and later was to carry them ever further in their conquest of the West, inspired in the hearts and minds and souls of those men a new ideal of our national democracy.

Perhaps it would be more exact to say that the frontier spirit caused a rebirth of the earlier ideal of free government. To this changed ideal the neighborly contacts of the frontier contributed in liberal measure. The rugged pioneers helped to fashion the new national spirit. The men who tamed the wilderness hereabouts were part of a new movement in our American life.

It was indeed a critical moment in American history when in our early national period the dauntless and intrepid pioneers strode across the Alleghanies to establish new Commonwealths like Arkansas. In that hard life of the frontier, where the personal qualities of the men and not the inheritance of caste or of property were the measure of worth, true democratic government was given its greatest impetus.

Simpler Life Is Gone.

In the early days of the Republic—those days when Arkansas became a State—our life was simple. There was little need of formal arrangements, or of Government interest, or action, to insure the social and economic well-being of the American people. In the life of the pioneer, sympathy and kindly help, ready co-operation in the accidents and emergencies of the frontier life, were the spontaneous manifestation of the American spirit. Without them the conquest of a continent could never have been made.

Today that life is gone. Its simplicity has vanished and we are each and all of us parts of a social civilization which ever tends to greater complexity. Latterly, the imperiled well-being, the very existence of large numbers of our people, have called for measures of organized Government assistance which the more spontaneous and personal promptings of a pioneer generosity could never alone have obtained.

Our country is indeed passing through a period which is urgently in need of ardent protectors of the rights of the common man. Mechanization of industry and mass production have put unparalleled power in the hands of the few. No small part of our problem today is to bring the fruits of this mechanization to the whole people.

The measure of the need has been the measure of the organization necessary to meet it. The human sympathy of our people would have tolerated nothing less. Common sense will tolerate nothing more.

States Rights Upheld.

Self-government we must and shall maintain. Let me put it thus, in a way which every man and woman can understand: local government must continue to act with full freedom in matters which are primarily of local concern; county government must retain the functions which logically belong to the county unit; State governments must and shall retain State sovereignty over all those activities of government which effectively and efficiently can be met by the States.

Let us analyze a little further, however—Why was a State government set up in Arkansas? The answer is that the colonization of this area had reached the point where individual settlements needed a uniformity of ordinances and laws. They needed a central body to govern in respect to those things which had grown beyond the scope of town government or county government.

In the same way the Federal Union itself was organized under a Constitution because in the days following the Revolution it was discovered that a mere federation of States was such a loose organization, with constant conflicts between the Thirteen States themselves, that a Constitution and a national organization to take care of government beyond State lines was a necessity.

The Constitution provided the best instrument ever devised for the continuation of these fundamental principles. Under its broad purposes we can and intend to march forward believing, as the overwhelming majority of Americans believe, that it is intended to meet and fit the amazing physical, economic and social requirements that confront us in this generation.

"What Is Past Is Prologue."

Beneath one of the symbolical figures which guard the entrance to the great new Archives Building in Washington is inscribed this quotation from Shakespeare's "Tempest," "What is past is prologue."

Times change but man's basic problems remain the same. He must seek a new approach to their solution when old approaches fail him.

The roar of the airplane has replaced the rumble of the covered wagon and the frontiers of a continent are spanned in less time than it took to cross an Arkansas county in those century-old days. It is idle for us now, as it was for the flatterers of King Canute, to ignore the facts of physics or the economic and social consequences of applied science.

These problems, with growing intensity, now flow past all sectional limitations and extend over the vast breadth of our whole domain.

Prices, wages, hours of labor, conditions of employment, social security—in short, the enjoyment by all men of their constitutional guaranties of life, liberty, and the pursuit of happiness—these questions, so delicate in their economic balance that any change in their status is reflected with the speed of light from Maine to California—we are commencing to solve.

Federal Aid to States.

The new approach to these problems may not be immediately discernible; but organization to meet human suffering can never be predicated on the relaxation of human effort.

Whether it be in the crowded tenements of the great cities or on many of the farm lands of the Nation we know that there dwell millions of our fellow human beings who suffer from the kind of poverty that spells undernourishment and under-privilege.

If local government, if State government, after exerting every reasonable effort, is unable to better their conditions, to raise or restore their purchasing power, then surely it would take a foolish and short-sighted man to say that it is no concern of the national Government itself.

We know that equality of individual ability has never existed and never will, but we insist that equality of opportunity still must be sought. We know that equality of local justice is, alas, not yet an established fact; this also is a goal we must and do seek.

If we seek to know what human effort can do in the face of adversity, we shall ever find inspiration and guidance in the achievements of the American pioneers, not merely those who founded the Nation, but those who extended its boundaries from ocean to ocean, of whom the first Arkansans were the prototype.

Arkansas has given many distinguished men to the Nation; but, my friends, I want to tell you very simply and from the heart, that in the meeting of our difficult problems of today, no man deserves greater credit for loyal devotion to a great cause than my old friend and associate, Senator Robinson, of Arkansas.

May I repeat the historical maxim: "What is past is prologue." Its meaning is not obscure. Out of the story of mankind's long struggle to govern himself, we should learn lessons which will guide us in solving the problems which beset us today.

The frontier, as we have been recalling it in this rapid survey of the planting of new States, has forever passed; but it has left a permanent imprint upon our political life and our social outlook.

The Western frontier from Jackson's time and the admission of Arkansas a hundred years ago, down to the admission of the last States within recent memory, produced a constant renaissance of the principle of free government.

The liberal tendencies of those, who for nearly a century we have called our Western statesmen, have been sometimes too little understood in the older, more conservative East. It was the frontier and its spirit of self-reliance; a willingness to lend a hand to the fellow down in his luck through no fault of his own. Upon those principles our Democracy was reborn a century ago; upon those principles alone will it endure.

AND CALL IT ACCIDENT

By Mrs. BELLOC LOWNDES

"REMEMBER that the moon is your friend . . . but be careful of her when she's just a slit in the sky. Is that clear?"

THAT IS what the fortune teller told the heroine of Mrs. Belloc Lowndes' latest mystery thriller, "And Call It Accident." What she did not tell the beautiful American heiress was that she had seen the "murder sign" in her hands!

IF YOU like love, mystery, romance, adventure, thrills and chills all wrapped in a single parcel of real literature, begin "And Call It Accident" today. You won't want to miss a single chapter.

Chapter One.

"EVEN now I can't think why you want to be an actress."

"I am an actress. Besides——"

"Besides what?" asked the young man hoarsely.

"I've told you again and again and again that the only thing I care for in life is acting."

"You never said so before you got that money."

"It was no good saying so then."

Her sensitive mouth was quivering, and then there swept over him a passion of anguished jealousy. Not jealousy of another man. He could have stood that. But a fierce jealousy of the theater, and of all that the theater stands for, to a stage-struck girl.

He allowed himself to gaze on her beautiful neck and slender dimpled shoulders. How horrible to know that if she had her will thousands of young men would gaze as he was gazing now at her exquisite body.

Ruth Starling was not what is called "a pretty girl," for the face which was all the world to George Dwight was lacking in that regularity of feature without which no woman can be listed as beautiful. But her mouth, if too large from an artist's point of view, betrayed the instinctive generosity and trustfulness of her nature. Her fair hair, naturally wavy, had in it glints of pale gold, and her hazel eyes were clear and bright, in very truth the windows of her soul. Also she had what is of paramount importance in any young woman's countenance, an alert, eager expression, for she took a keen interest and pleasure in everything going on about her.

She also possessed what is rarer than many would admit—an almost perfect figure, wedded to yet another unusual physical attribute, that is exquisitely shaped hands and feet.

Ruth had an instinctive taste for dress, and she had just spent an enchanting week in Paris, choosing clothes for what she hoped was to be a successful London theatrical campaign.

She reddened now under the young man's close scrutiny, yet no suspicion of the bitter physical jealously which filled his heart entered her mind. Even so, she vaguely felt hurt and surprised by the expression on his face. Until today he had been a perfect escort during the fortnight he had been in London.

Strangely Alone.

She asked herself why he had chosen to start this painful conversation just as she was feeling that after all she did care for him sufficiently to feel sad that he was leaving London for home the next morning.

Here are were, George Dwight, an American youth, and Ruth Starling, an American girl, both feeling strangely alone in London.

It was a fine warm July evening, and they were standing by the window of an attractively furnished sitting room in the Savoy Hotel.

Below them the water of the Thames moved slowly, majestically, on its gray course, and at times—especially at night—the river reminded Ruth of the wonderful views of the East River as seen from the apartment in Beekman place she had shared with an older woman this last winter and spring.

"What I can't make out," said George unhappily, "is why you want to act here in England instead of at home. Just because you had one bad failure doesn't mean——"

She interrupted, in a hurt tone. "A failure of that sort means nothing. I expect to fail dozens of times before I'm through as an actress."

"But why want to act in London, where nobody knows you?"

"You can't have forgotten what you have been told again and again? I have got a play that I believe in—a splendid play! The whole cast is English, with the exception of an American girl, and it's a great part!"

"Of course I remember you told me about that play."

"I would have liked you to read it, but I knew you wouldn't care to——"

There was a touch of weariness in her voice, for she was tired as well as despondent tonight. She had been out to a theater every evening since George Dwight had arrived in London a fortnight ago. Dwight, who was by way of being Ruth's lawyer as well as the unfortunate man who loved her, had been going to stay in England for another month, then he had suddenly received a cable saying that his father had been taken very ill and that he must hurry home.

"All I care about is that I'm going away and leaving you alone," he said sorely.

"I'm not sugar or salt, so I won't melt, as Jane used to say," and she tried to laugh.

"Thank God, you're out of that vampire's clutches, anyway," he exclaimed.

"You rescued me from that dreadful woman, and I'll never leave off being grateful to you for that," and she smiled at him conciliatingly.

As a matter of fact, she had more reason to be grateful that she knew. "Jane," the so-called friend with whom she had shared an apartment last winter, was one of those women who are found in all capitals living on the fringe of the theatrical world.

Stage Struck.

It was through Jane's good offices, and in exchange for a fee of $5,000, that Ruth Starling had obtained a part in a poor play which had only run a few days. Even now the color rushed up into the girl's face when she recalled some of the criticisms leveled at her by the New York critics. "Amateurish" and "affected" had been the two words of which the repetition had hurt her most.

"I wouldn't mind so much," went on the young man in a gloomy tone, "if I knew where you were going to spend the summer. I'm told almost all the shows will shut down here within four or five weeks."

"I think you might trust such a nice man and such a good lawyer as you believe Mr. Singleton to be to choose me the kind of people I'm likely to be happy with for that short time. I believe from something he said to me this morning that he has already found me a delightful place with theatrical folk."

After a moment she added, "There will be no fear of my spending too much, for Mr. Singleton is always trying to save me money."

"There are other troubles in life besides money troubles," said George Dwight grimly. "Also, I don't need to remind you that Europe is full of fortune hunters."

If there was one thing in the world Ruth felt she was safe from it was a fortune hunter! Her whole soul was absorbed in the stage and in what she confidently believed was going to be a successful theatrical career.

Ruth could not help feeling glad that this good friend of all her life, George Dwight, who was now looking at her with such anxious eyes, had never guessed how near she had been to saying "yes" to his persistent wooing when, like a meteor out of the sky had come the fortune—rather over a million and a half dollars—which had changed her life from one of resigned dullness as a school marm to an existence which was to be full of marvelous opportunities, of which the greatest opportunity of all would be that of becoming an actress.

Already Ruth had discovered something of the ugly and grasping side of human nature, and that unhappy knowledge caused her, even if only half consciously, to value the unselfish devotion of the young man now standing by her side. So she said: "Nothing is settled yet, George, and you will see tonight the people to whom I may be going as a paying guest. Mr. Singleton telephoned just before dinner and said I was to meet them where he and Mrs. Singleton are taking me. I asked if you could come, too, and he said, 'Of course.' About my meeting the Trefanes, as they are called, he also said he is acting as the friend of both parties, and not as a lawyer at all. Mrs. Singleton thinks I mayn't care for Mrs. Trefane, and if I don't I'm not going to give a thought to their wanting a paying guest. Mr. Singleton was very insistent about that."

"It's certainly decent of the old man to be just your friend about that matter," muttered George. The kindly old man had chosen from the first to treat the American girl as the friend of a friend; and this evening he and his wife were going to call for her so that she might meet, also in an informal way, a certain Capt. Trefane, who was supposed to know the whole of London's dramatic world, and who, as a matter of fact, had been a threatical manager himself.

How George cursed the money which had been left to Ruth by a capricious uncle of her mother's! This aged millionaire, close-fisted and eccentric, had scarcely noticed her existence, and had let it be understood he intended to leave his big fortune to the university of his native State. But finally he had left half his money to Ruth and half to a still more distant relation. It meant a great deal to George Dwight that she had welcomed his unexpected escort to England.

The telephone bell rang. Ruth took up the receiver and said: "Why, of course, Mr. Singleton! I'm glad you're early. Please come right up. I shall be delighted to have a talk with you before we go on to that night club!"

She turned around.

"He wants to tell me something more about this Capt. Trefane and Mrs. Trefane, so he and Mrs. Singleton have come earlier than they said they'd do."

"In that case, Ruthie, I'll go along to my room, and you'd better send for me when you're ready to start."

Suddenly this girl he adored surprised him, for she threw her arms around his neck and put her soft cheek against his chin.

"I Love You."

"George, dear? I do hate your going away——"

His arms closed about her, for one immortal moment their lips clung together, and then—"I don't need to tell you that I love you," he said in a strangled voice. "You know that well enough. I can't remember the time when I didn't love you."

There came a knock at the door.

"You'll cable me, or better still phone me, if ever you're in any real trouble, my precious darling?"

"I wouldn't lose a minute."

There came a second knock at the door, and as she called out, "Come in," she stepped back and switched on the lights in the chandelier.

Mr. and Mrs. Singleton walked into the room, and the elderly lady kissed Ruth affectionately. Then she held out her hand to the young man whom she had at once guessed was in love with the girl.

She wasn't altogether sorry that George was leaving England tomorrow, though she felt full of sympathy for the cause of his departure.

"I do hope you have better news of your father today, Mr. Dwight?"

"Well, no, the news, if anything is worse," he said quietly.

"I'm truly sorry to hear that." And then Mrs. Singleton moved to the further side of the room and beckoned him to take a seat by her side. She knew her husband wanted to say what he called "a word in private" to Ruth Starling.

The low-toned conversation began with the words: "My wife thinks I ought to be absolutely frank with you, Miss Starling, with regard to Capt. Philip Trefane, whom I hope may be of use to you in your London theatrical debut."

He waited a moment, for in his ears were echoing the words his better half had used. "I think, Ned, that you are bound to let that girl know that Capt. Trefane has not always run straight."

Ruth, meanwhile, was looking at the old Englishman with trusting, if slightly puzzled, eyes, as he went on, trying to speak lightly: "You probably don't know the old Cornish proverb which runs, 'By Tre, Pol, and Pen, you may know the Cornish men.' Now, the man whom I am just going to introduce to you is the last sprig of a very old Cornish territorial family. He came into a goodly inheritance when he was 21, and he had lost the whole of it by the time he was 24 through folly and gambling. This was just before the war, so he is somewhat over 40, though he does not look his age. He did well at soldiering, but while on his last leave home he made a foolish war marriage to a widow who had one child, a girl. From my point of view—I am being brutally frank, Miss Starling—it was fortunate for him that the first Mrs. Trefane died within a year, for after the war he found it impossible to get a job for some considerable time. But a bit of real luck befell him. He married again, and this time a girl who has proved a wonderful wife. When you see her tonight I think you will agree with me that she is a beautiful woman and could no doubt have married a very different type of man. But they fell madly in love, and I think they are still in love."

He paused, and Ruth looked at him with eyes aglow. She felt touched by what seemed to her the story of a moving romance.

He began again: "Mrs. Trefane is clever as well as very attractive, and I have always believed that it was owing to her efforts her husband got his footing at last in the London theatrical world. As I told you yesterday, for two years Capt. Trefane was manager of the Mayfair Theatrical company; and I have every reason to think that he did his job there well. Unhappily, the company was wound up, and since then he has had nothing to do. Still, I understand that his connection with the stage was long enough to make him thoroughly conversant with the business side of theatrical life, and that is why I am bringing you and him together."

"He is the very kind of man that I have been looking for!" Ruth looked radiant as she made this confident assertion, and though the old lawyer made no answer, on the whole he agreed with his American client. Philip Trefane did happen to have had the experience which should make him the right man for just this particular kind of work, and he would be indeed a fool were he not to make good in what, after all, was bound to be a pleasant and well-paid job.

Even so, his lawyer's conscience still felt uneasy as he went on: "And now about your wish to find some quiet, picturesque place in the country in which to spend the end of July and all August? As I also told you this morning, Capt. and Mrs. Trefane would like to find a paying guest for August and part of September. They have just been offered the loan of Perranuth castle on the Cornish coast. It belongs to the marchioness of Cicester, Capt. Trefane's aunt, who lives in a charming house inland within 2 miles of the castle. I received this letter from her a few days ago, and Mrs. Singleton feels you ought to read it before you decide anything in connection with Capt. Trefane."

He handed Ruth a large sheet of notepaper on which was embossed a coronet above two intertwined initials:

The Manor House,
Perranuth, Cornwall.
July 18.

"My dear Mr. Singleton:

"I turn to you as I always do when I am in trouble, for I am anxious again about the Trefanes. I had a letter from Iris today, and I fear they are in very low water just now. As you know, she is proud and sensitive, and says very little, but reading between the lines I could see that she wants me to lend them Perranuth Castle this summer. She says Philip may get a job at the end of September or in October, but meanwhile they have that tiresome girl, Helen Bates, on their hands. It has always been extraordinary to me that he does not force her mother's people to look after her!

"If you approve, I propose to tell Iris that they may have the castle till the end of August, and that I will provide linen and plate.

"I think you will remember what happened last time they were there. But I do not think it is likely to happen again, as I have said quite plainly to the butcher, the baker, and the candlestick maker in Lilyford, that I will not be responsible for Capt. Trefane's household bills this time.

"My son, John, who is sometimes unexpectedly practical, suggests that they should try and get a paying guest. But I am not going to do that very thankless thing—offer any advice.

"Philip is, however, my poor dead sister's only child, and I feel a sense of duty to him; also, I am well aware that Iris makes him an excellent wife."

"This brings warm regards to yourself and love to Mrs. Singleton from

Yours sincerely,
"ALBINIA CICESTER."

As he took back the letter from Ruth's hand the lawyer observed, "You will gather from this epistle that Lady Cicester is a kind and sensible woman; also that Philip Trefane, since he lost his theatrical job, has been very short of money and was foolish enough to leave certain small household bills unpaid when he and his wife were last lent Perranuth castle. It is because of that allusion in Lady Cicester's letter that I have shown it to you. I wish to impress upon you the great importance of your not entering into any monetary arrangements with this man without first consulting me. I am taking a chance as it is in recommending him to you, and I would not have done so had I not made inquiries and found that during the time he was managing the Mayfair Theatrical Company he seems to have run absolutely straight."

In a sense, what the old man was saying did reach Ruth Starling's mind, but she was naturally too full of herself and her career to feel any interest in Capt. Trefane's private affairs. In fact, she felt a slight sensation of distress at having been made to read his aunt's letter.

"Now, if this evening you take a sufficient liking for the Trefanes you might consider being their paying guest this summer. Perranuth Castle is a beautiful and romantic place, built on a cliff overhanging the sea. Only about ten rooms are livable and in order, and it still looks what it was, a medieval stronghold. You would have a certain amount of society while there, owing to the fact that Lady Cicester lives nearby."

"Everything sounds perfect. I don't know how to thank you, Mr. Singleton!"

He smiled kindly. "I suppose I need hardly tell you that I am what in this country is called 'the family solicitor' of the Cicester family. Lady Cicester and I are real friends, and have been even since she married—a matter of 44 years ago. She isn't a universal favorite, for she is masterful and, too fond of minding other people's business. Still, she is fundamentally sound, and a truly kind woman. Before you meet Philip Trefane I should like you to know exactly what I told him about you today."

He produced another piece of paper and read aloud a few typewritten notes.

"Interview with Philip Trefane.

"I told him that a young American lady, an actress who was now a client of mine, has bought the rights in a play in which she proposes to take the leading part in London; and that having no knowledge of the British dramatic world, she asked my advice as to how to get into touch with some one who knows the ropes. I suggested that he might be the very man for the purpose. He was naturally overjoyed. I told him Miss Starling was in a position to put on a play, but that all business of a financial kind must be done through me. I suggested the two should meet in my office, but Capt. Trefane suggested an informal meeting at a place called the Dragon Club this evening, and asked my wife and me to bring my client there. I consented to this plan, because I realized it would be better for Miss Starling that her first meeting with Capt. Trefane should be of an informal nature.

Putting the pieces of paper back into his pocket, the lawyer went on: "I am told a vast sum of money may be lost over even one theatrical production, and I strongly feel that it is my duty to protect your interests. So, should you have any word with Capt. Trefane alone, please do not mention finance. Leave all that side of the matter to me."

Eagerly Ruth exclaimed, "I don't mind what I spend——"

He interrupted her sharply. "Please, please don't talk like that to Capt. Trefane. Forgive my plain speaking—you will be a fool if you do," but to soften the effect of his words he patted her soft, pretty hand.

Meanwhile, on the other side of the room, a very different type of dialogue was taking place.

"I am sorry you are going away so soon, Mr. Dwight, but don't feel anxious about Miss Starling; we are going to do our very best for her. Believe me, we are!"

Mrs. Singleton's tone was kind.

Dwight exclaimed in a low, tense voice, "I can't help thinking that you know I love Ruth. I have cared for her since we were children together. My own wish, always, was to make her my wife. Then she got this fortune, and now her whole soul is in the theater."

Keep Early Hours.

"I know that that is so," said Mrs. Singleton musingly. "Yet she does not seem, to my thinking, cut out for the life of an actress."

"I'm sure she's not, but she's quite sure she is—and her New York failure had no effect on her at all. She simply thought it a bit of bad luck."

They remained silent for a moment, but when Mrs. Singleton heard her husband raise his voice she got up and, followed by George Dwight, walked across the room.

"We shall have to be going soon, my dear," she observed, "for Philip Trefane told you that this queer club of his is apt to get overfull as the evening goes on."

"That's true! Besides, you and I are early folk, and I don't think we can stay there longer than an hour, considering how busy a morning I have before me."

Once settled down in his comfortable car, the old lawyer said suddenly, "I hope to God I've done right by that dear, confiding little girl, Jane."

"I hope you have, Ned—but I don't feel quite happy about it. Still, it isn't as if you were handing Ruth Starling over to that heartless, selfish couple without any one being there to look after her. Lady Cicester has a kind side, and you can write her a nice letter about Ruth and make her understand what a sweet-natured, delightful girl she is." With a twinkle in her eye she added: "I should say, too, just a word about her being a million-dollar young lady, if I were you, for she'd never say so herself." Then suddenly, in a tone of real alarm, she exclaimed, "You didn't tell Philip Trefane how very rich she is?"

"My dear Jane—you've been married to me now for 37 years, yet you still think me a perfect fool!"

"Indeed I don't!"

"Indeed you do. If I tell Lady Cicester about that girl's fortune she'll set about securing Ruth Starling for some young man she has just now under her wing. Luckily Lord John is too old."

His wife laughed. "I wouldn't put it past her ladyship!" She's always hoping Lord John will marry—and marry money."

He, too, began to laugh. "It would be a case of 'Beauty and the Beast,' with a vengeance, eh?"

"But to go back to the Trefanes, Ned——"

He turned around in the dark car. "Now, look here, Jane. Life has taught me, if it hasn't you, that the devil one knows is generally better than the stranger devil. I know Phil Trefane through and through. The one job he ever took on in which he made good was this theatrical job. I've made inquiries the last few days and I haven't heard a single word against him." He amended his sentence: "I mean in that connection."

The Dragon Club.

Mrs. Singleton said slowly, "He and his Iris are so horribly fond of money."

"So are most people," observed the old lawyer dryly. "What's more, the more they have the fonder they get of it."

"Well, you've done your best for them all, my dear."

"I hope I have. I think I have. It's a marvelous stroke of luck for that couple that a girl with heaps of money should have suddenly dropped from the sky into their laps. Ruth Starling has a generous nature, and she can afford to indulge it. I shall suggest, if she makes up her mind to be the paying guest, that she give them £15 a week. They can run the castle on that sum with perfect comfort, indeed luxury.

The car slowed down. "Hullo, can this be the place?" cried the lawyer.

"I shouldn't think so," answered his wife dubiously.

The car had shot down a narrow byway in which there was no room for another vehicle to pass. It stopped with a jerk in front of a door set in a blank wall.

"This can't be the entrance to a club?"

But already the door had been opened by a liveried janitor, who asked, "Looking for the Dragon Club, sir?"

"Yes, we are. Is it here?"

"Certainly, sir."

"Dobbs, come back in an hour," called out Mr. Singleton to his chauffeur.

The porter exclaimed in a familiar tone, "In an hour, sir? Why the fun will hardly have begun by then!"

To that remark, as he shepherded his wife into a white-washed entrance hall, the lawyer made no answer.

There was an elevator filling up one side of the hall, and they waited a few moments for George Dwight and Ruth Starling.

George was very heavy-hearted, for in the taxi Ruth had talked in what he felt was a forced, unreal way of various subjects he knew to be far from her real mind. But he forgot himself when they all stepped out of the elevator, and he heard the words: "Capt. Trefane is in the lounge, ladies and gentlemen; you will find him in a moment."

Not only Ruth Starling, but George Dwight, also, gazed with absorbed interest at the man who advanced to meet the English lawyer. George hated him at sight, but Ruth's impression of the Englishman whom she believed, with truth, was going to play an all-important part in her immediate future, was one of eager liking.

Tall, slim with thin, finely drawn features, Philip Trefane looked much younger than his age, which was 43. He was obviously in perfect physical condition.

A Handsome Man.

His hatchet-shaped face was deeply tanned, his eyes were clear blue, with dark lashes forming a curious contrast to the mass of fair hair brushed sleekly back from his forehead. But for his tight-lipped mouth and weak-looking chin he would have been strikingly good-looking. He was wearing this evening a white waistcoat, and Mrs. Singleton, who had always disliked him, said to herself that he might have been going to a debutante's ball.

Some moments before he walked forward to greet the Singletons Capt. Trefane had fixed his eyes on Ruth Starling.

Ruth was wearing a rather unusual dress this evening. It was a pale gray chiffon frock, lately made for her in Paris. Around the slender, column-like neck, which was one of her best physical points, hung a necklace of small, perfectly matched emeralds. If those stones were real Miss Starling must indeed have money to burn! At one time in his checkered career Philip Trefane had learned a good deal concerning precious stones.

He turned toward his wife and put a light, firm hand on her arm as he said in a very low voice: "There are the Singletons looking for us, Iris. I want you to try and manage so that the American actress and I have a chance of being alone together for a few minutes at any rate."

"I don't know that it will be easy to do that with old Mother Singleton playing chaperon," she murmured back. "However, of course I'll do my best, darling."

Continued Tomorrow.

"All I care is that I'm going away and leaving you alone," said the man who loved her.

For Love or Money

Conclusion

CHAPTER THIRTY-FIVE.

VAL READ the yellow bit of paper again. It was unbelievable, preposterous—and yet here it was all in capital letters, even if the letters were jiggling before his eyes.

"Story of Maizie one of finest manuscripts we have ever had submitted stop Very proud to publish Maizie stop Suggest you come immediately to New York to talk over future plans and terms of long writing contract stop Wiring $1,000 advance stop Congratulations stop Macy, Drayton's."

"I must tell Brenda," and he was at the door and running down the stairs. But when he was in front of 519, he didn't ring.

He could hear Brenda inside, talking on the telephone. Her voice came to him very clearly, "Yes, Mr. Brady. I understand. Yes, Mr. Brady, I will." After that he heard the receiver click on its stand and he stuffed the telegram in his pocket as he knocked softly.

The knock must have been very gentle indeed for Brenda didn't come to the door. Val knocked again, and this time she answered, and he went in.

There was the same cloak about her now that he knew so well. He felt it just as he felt the physical void of Lally's absence. It spoke to him very plainly.

Peter chattered a bit from his cage and the void of Lally seemed greater.

"Are you going to take Peter with you or are you going to let me have him?" Val asked.

"I'm going to let you have him and I'm not going to Dr. Pierce's cottage after all."

"Where are you going then?"

"Away. I'm leaving in an hour."

"Won't you tell me where?" And a great fear came over him that she was going away to be married, and that he would never see her again. A surge of hatred for Walter Jason followed the fear; Jason who should have been with her in her trouble and who wasn't; Jason who should have done what he had done and hadn't.

"Are you going to be married?"

"No, Val, I'm not. That wasn't true—my being engaged. I never was, but I've got to go away now, get out of town within an hour, and if you'll go I'll do my packing—"

He was on his feet in an instant, both hands gripped on her shoulders, "You never were engaged? You never were engaged?"

"Don't, please, Val—let me tell you the rest——"

"I don't want to hear the rest. I only want you to tell me you never were engaged——"

"But there's something more important——"

"Nothing is more important than that!"

She tried to push him away but couldn't. His hands slid from her shoulders and folded around her tightly. "You do love me a little, don't you dear?" he begged. "Tell me you love me a little——"

"I won't tell you anything until you listen to me." It was so hard to make him take his arms away when she didn't want them away, to make him sit on the couch, across the room from her, to see his hungry eyes looking at her. But she did it.

"I'm in trouble, Val—and I got into it myself. I knew what I was doing when I went to work for the Jason Enterprises. It was a crooked selling scheme, and the Federal men have been after all of us for some time. Walter is in jail and just now, a moment before you came in one of the Federal men, a man by the name of Brady, called and told me that Ethel Rush had just been arrested in New York and was being brought here. Because I was instrumental in helping Mr. Brady find Walter, he promised to try and help me. He has helped me. He told me just now that I had an hour to get out of town, and that he doesn't want me to come back. He doesn't care where I go as long as I go some place, and he doesn't want to know where I'm going. At 7:30 sharp some of his men are coming up here to arrest me, and I'm to be gone when they come. It was a bargain he made with me a couple of weeks ago, but I never thought he'd really let me off. Now that's it——"

He sprang up from the couch, and knelt in front of her chair, pillowing his head in her lap. "Darling, you didn't have to tell me all that. I wouldn't care if you had cut someone's throat. You should know me better than that. Nothing matters at all except that you love me. And you don't have to love me very much—just a little, just a slice of love, an edge. I have all the rest, enough for both of us. Such a mountain of love! And you do love me—a little, only a little, don't you?"

"I love you—a great deal," she whispered touching his hair, smoothing it. As she spoke Lally's face came before her, but it was a happy, gay face she saw, and she knew there was no wrong in saying the words she had said.

His arms, as he folded them about her, weren't possessive, fierce arms. they were tender, and his kiss was tender, too. An impatient chirp from Peter brought Brenda back to earth.

"I've got to pack! Val, will you take Peter for me?"

He let her go reluctantly. "I should say you do have to pack. We can talk later. I have to pack, too. Supposing I go up and do mine and meet you here in 15 minutes?"

"You—pack?"

"Of course. I'm going with you, maybe you didn't know, but I'm going. If you're going to be a fugitive from Mr. Brady, so am I. And if your Mr. Brady is my Mr. Brady, who is Tim Brady, he'll have his men here at 7:30 sharp, because I know him of old. We haven't a minute to lose——"

"You don't have to go, Val——"

"But I do, and we're going to New York. Maizie's been sold and we can celebrate together—it's just as I wanted to all along. Darling, you're crying! And you've just told me we haven't time for kisses—well, we haven't time for tears, either."

"And Peter?"

"Peter's going with us," he said decisively, "and my old typewriter is going with us, and tomorrow Peter will belong to Mr. and Mrs. Val Sargent instead of Brenda Fayre."

"Oh, Lally," she said when the door closed after him, "what have I done to you? I didn't mean to, I didn't. I meant to go away and try to forget him. I didn't dream he'd come with me—Lally, do you hear me, wherever you are? You know, don't you? You understand—in that some place where you're walking—"

The End.

Miss Barber Is Married To Dr. Clark

Wedding Ceremony Is Performed in Home of Bride's Parents.

Couple Leaves for North on Honeymoon; Will Live in Hartford.

Miss Janet Barber, daughter of Col. and Mrs. Alvin Barton Barber, of Sky Meadows, Bradley Hills, Md., was married at 5 o'clock yesterday to Dr. Samuel Drury Clark, son of Mr. and Mrs. Thomas Clark, of Hartford, Conn. The ceremony which was followed by a reception in the garden took place at the home of the bride's parents. Dr. Samuel Drury, uncle of the bridegroom and head of St. Paul's School, officiated.

The ceremony was performed in the drawing room, the mantel being decorated with gardenia plants and pink Canterbury bells.

The motif of the bridal costumes, designed by the bride, was inspired by the Old Renaissance altar before which they were married. She wore a gown of pink chiffon over pink satin with long triple-puffed sleeves and a full skirt made with panels. Her veil was of peachblow pink tulle and she carried a bouquet of African daisies. She was given in marriage by her father.

Her only attendant, Miss Evelyn Thompson, of Boston, wore a fuchsia chiffon frock over pink satin, and carried a bouquet of pink canterbury bells.

Mr. Frederick Brown, of Boston, was best man.

The bride chose as her going-away costume a frock designed by Lenz, of Salzburg, Austria, of blue linen and pink tweed with a Tyrolean hat and blue shoes with pink heels. After a honeymoon in the North woods, she and Dr. Clark will make their home in Hartford, Conn., where he is an interne in the Hartford Hospital.

The bride, who was graduated from Bryn Mawr College and Radcliffe, is a professor of philosophy at Vassar College. Dr. Clark is a graduate of Harvard College and Harvard Medical School.

Among the out-of-town guests at the wedding were Mr. Maurice Lombardi, of San Francisco, Calif., brother of Mrs. Barber, with Mrs. Lombardi and their daughter, Mrs. McCormick Lombardi; Mrs. Charles Peabody and Mrs. Legrand Cannon, of Cambridge, Mass.; Mr. Godfrey Barber, of Rochester, N. Y.; Mr. Cornelius Lombardi, of Kansas City, and the Misses Drury, aunts of the bridegroom, of Boston.

Mr. Lombardi McCormick, the bride's brother, who has been studying in Europe, is expected home on Monday.

Horse Classic To Open Today

Two-Day Program Will Be Staged at Famous Grafton Farm.

The Upperville Horse Show, first outstanding turf event since the Preakness, which opens today and continues through tomorrow, is drawing the usual quota of horse lovers who have been following the various track classics throughout the spring. One of the oldest horse shows in the country, it is held at Grafton Farm, where the rows of fine old trees make it one of the shadiest courses in the country.

The feature of today's show will be a family class in road hacks, in which, among other participants, will be Mrs. Arthur White, of Middleburg, and her son, Wrisley, and Mrs. Peggy Heath Hamilton and her daughter, Peggy, of Warrenton.

Rear Admiral Cary T. Grayson and Mrs. John Hay Whitney, whose names usually are posted on the list of entries at Upperville, are not exhibiting this year. Mrs. Whitney still is in mourning for a member of her family and has not shown her horses for several months. Among the exhibitors are Mrs. Isabel Dodge Sloane, Mr. E. L. Redmon and Mr. C. Oliver Iselin, jr., of Middleburg, and Mr. Carlton Eacho and Mr. G. P. Plummer, of Washington.

Among the box holders at the show are Mrs. D. C. Sands, Miss Charlotte Noland, principal of Foxcroft School; Mrs. W. F. Hitt, Sterling Larrabee, Mrs. A. C. Randolph, Mrs. C. Oliver Iselin, Mrs. H. Rozier Dulaney and Mrs. James Skinner.

Mrs. George Robert Slater, who is entertaining at luncheon before today's event, will have in her box Miss Margaret Green, of Richmond, and Miss Mary Hunter Jones and Miss Katherine Ewing, of Norfolk, Va., who are guests of Mrs. Slater's sister, Miss Anne Gochnauer.

The next important event on the Virginia horse show calendar is the Loudoun Hunt Horse Show, to be held June 27 at Belmont, the estate of the former Secretary of War and Mrs. Patrick J. Hurley.

To Attend Graduation.

Mr. and Mrs. Abner H. Ferguson, of Chevy Chase, will leave today for Wellesley College for the graduation exercises on Monday. Their daughter, Miss Margaret Lee Ferguson, will be graduated. Miss Ferguson, who majored in English at Wellesley, was prepared at the National Cathedral School.

Miss Mary Gibson, 2 Friends to Sail For London Today

Miss Mary Alice Gibson, daughter of Col. and Mrs. Paul W. Gibson, of the Army War College, will sail from New York today for London. She will be accompanied by Miss Inez McLaughlin and Miss Jane Ross, of Galesburg, Ill. They expect to spend the summer in England and on the continent.

Miss McLaughlin and Miss Ross will return to their homes after the trip, while Miss Gibson will sail from Rotterdam via the Suez Canal to join her parents in Honolulu, where Col. Gibson has been transferred. Miss Gibson will spend the month of October in Manila as the guest of Capt. and Mrs. George Newton, arriving in Honolulu some time in November.

Col. and Mrs. Gibson will leave Washington and sail from New York August 14 by way of the Panama Canal for their new station.

Admiral Butler On His Way East

Rear Admiral Henry Varnum Butler, formerly commandant of the Washington Navy Yard, and for the last few years stationed on the West Coast, has left California for the East. He is accompanied by Mrs. Butler.

Upon their arrival in the East they will spend a brief time at their home, Ca Me Suffit, in the Virginia mountains, before going to Charleston, S. C., where Admiral Butler will assume command of the navy yard.

Mrs. Butler's son-in-law and daughter, Commander and Mrs. Lucien Green, will remain in their home in Hollywood until later in the year, when they plan to come East.

Mrs. Green's son-in-law and daughter, Lieut. Comdr. and Mrs. Allan Flagg, the latter formerly Miss Anna Smith, who was presented to Capital society by her grandmother, Mrs. Butler, make their home in Alexandria, Va., while Commander Flagg is on duty at Bolling Field.

Mr. and Mrs. William Smith, son and daughter-in-law of Mrs. Green, recently returned from Hollywood, where they have made their home since their marriage several years ago. Mrs. Smith was formerly Miss Virginia Mayo, daughter of Mrs. Pendleton Mayo, of Washington.

Stanley E. Disney And Miss Martin To Marry Monday

Miss Frances Martin, who was graduated last week from National Park Seminary, and Mr. Stanley E. Disney, who received his degree last evening from George Washington University, will be married Monday at St. John's Episcopal Church and will reside in Washington.

Miss Martin is from Fort Worth, Tex. Her fiance, who is the nephew of Representative and Mrs. Wesley E. Disney, of Oklahoma, is the son of Mr. and Mrs. L. G. Disney, of Muskogee, Okla. The wedding will take place Monday at 8 p. m. and will be followed by a reception at the apartment of Representative and Mrs. Disney at the Shoreham.

Eleanor Boehs Becomes Bride

Miss Eleanor Elizabeth Boehs, daughter of Mr. and Mrs. Rudolph John Boehs, last evening became the bride of Mr. Arthur Dietrich Kriemeymeyer, son of Mr. and Mrs. Henry Kriemelmeyer. The wedding took place at Trinity Lutheran Church, where the ceremony was performed at 8 o'clock by the Rev. Edwin Pieplow.

The bride, who was given in marriage by her father, wore an ensemble of white satin with a coat ending in a long train, and a Queen Mary standing collar of lace. Her white tulle veil was held in place with orange blossoms, and she carried a shower bouquet of gardenias and lilies of the valley.

The maid of honor, Miss Rhoda Hennig, wore a gown of violet mousseline de soie with a ruffled shoulder cape, and carried yellow roses. The bridesmaids were Miss Bettie Pickard, who wore a frock of yellow mousseline de soie made on princess lines, and Mrs. Louis Borhaus, who wore a gown of similar design in Nile green mousseline de soie. Both wore large leghorn hats and carried bouquets of spring flowers.

Mr. Harry Kriemelmeyer was his brother's best man, and the ushers were Mr. Edward Volkmer, Mr. Phillip Krautwurst, Mr. Andrew Wahl, and Mr. Milton C. White.

Party Honors Mr. Belicovitch And His Fiancee

Mr. and Mrs. J. J. Mack Are Hosts at Reception, Dance at Home Here.

Mr. and Mrs. J. J. Mack entertained yesterday at a reception and dance at their home on Forest lane in honor of Mrs. Mack's son, George N. Belicovitch, and Miss Mary Louise Stafford, who will become his bride June 27. The wedding will take place in the rectory of St. Ignatius Church, New York.

Mr. and Mrs. Mack and the guests of honor received in the drawing room, standing near the piano on which was a large bouquet of pink gladioli. The flowers were a background against which Mrs. Mack's lace gown of cornflower blue presented artistic contrast, as did Miss Stafford's gown of powder blue lace, which was trimmed with a belt of fuchia shade.

In the adjoining room, where refreshments were served, the table was decorated with a center bouquet of white and yellow lilies, roses and white snapdragons. Lunch was served at one end and ice cream at the other.

Grapes Decorate Bowl.

Mrs. Charles A. Zoller, jr., one of those who assisted at the punch bowl, wore a long chiffon gown of periwinkle shade. Her wide leghorn hat was trimmed with a single rose in front and a filmy black veil over the top. The punch bowl was decorated with a cluster of grapes, hung over one edge.

Among others who assisted Mrs. Mack were Mrs. Charles L. McNary, Mrs. H. O. Chalkley, Senora de Echegaray, Mme. Perazic, Mme. Dimitriu, Miss Lyla Townsend, Mrs. Joseph Jackson, Mrs. Thomas J. Healy, Mrs. Ross Thompson, Mrs. J. Fred Essary and Mme. Dimitrieff.

An orchestra played for the dancing on the inclosed porch and the open terrace nearby.

With the Financial Counselor of the Rumanian Legation and Mme. Dimitriu was Mme. Dimitriu's mother, Mrs. John W. Bennett, who was holding a court of her own as she sat at one side of the room for a time and was sought by friends who came up to greet her.

Others Present.

Also among the guests were the Ambassador of Cuba, Senor Dr. Guillermo Patterson y de Jauregui and his daughter, Miss Olga Patterson, who wore a dark tailored suit with a short jacket and a small felt hat to match, trimmed with a small bunch of pink flowers. The Minister of Guatemala and Senora de Recinos were there, as were Senora de Campbell, Mrs. Stanley Reed, Mrs. Walter R. Tuckerman, Mrs. William F. Dennis, Dr. and Mrs. N. H. Darton, Mr. and Mrs. Wade Ellis, Miss Margaret Gage, Mrs. Francis Walker, Miss Elena deSyan, Mrs. Humphrey Daniel, who wore a black dress figured in a design formed of bowknots of white, and a large black hat with white in the trimming; Dr. MacPherson Crichton, Mr. and Mrs. Guy D'Aulby, Mr. and Mrs. Albert Jones, Mrs. Webster Dawley, Mrs. Eldon King, Mrs. Strickland Gilliland, Mr. and Mrs. Benjamin Hill and Miss Cynthia Hill, Mrs. James F. Newton and Miss Helen Newton, the Rev. Edmund Walsh, vice president of Georgeown University; Mme. Espaillat, Senora de Amores and Senorita Estrella de Amores.

Mr. Sevier Weds Mary F. Perrier In Christ Church

Historic Christ Church in Alexandria, Va., was the scene last evening of the marriage of Miss Mary Frances Perrier, of Sidney Australia, daughter of Mrs. Ethel Ogden Perrier and granddaughter of the late Alexander Ogden, noted Sydney architect, to Mr. John Love Sevier, of Hendersonville, N. C., son of Dr. and Mrs. Joseph R. Sevier. Dr. Sevier is president of the Fassifern School for Girls. The ceremony took place just a year from the day the couple first met at the home of Mr. Sevier's grandmother, Mrs. C. L. Sevier, in Bristol, Tenn.

Mrs. Sevier, who is 86 years old, was here for the wedding.

Mr. Sevier and his bride chose Washington and Alexandria as the scene of their wedding, having visited here frequently as guests of his uncle and aunt, Mr. and Mrs. H. H. Shelton, at the Shoreham Hotel. The reception which followed the ceremony was held at the Shoreham.

Mr. Doll Officiates.

Large baskets of white gladioli, blue delphinium and baby's breath decorated the church. The ceremony was performed by the Rev. Mr. H. L. Doll. Mr. Ralph Perrier, of Sidney, brother of the bride, gave her in marriage. Her gown was of hand-made Limerick lace, cream color, over taffeta of the same shade, fashioned in Kate Greenaway style. Her tulle veil fell from a cap in poke bonnet effect of stiffened lace. She carried an early Victorian bouquet of lilies of the valley and gardenias in an old silver holder lent her by her childhood governess, who had brought it to Australia from England.

Miss Cynthia Bulter, of Sidney, the bride's only attendant, was gowned in aquamarine chiffon, with large leghorn hat trimmed with flowers of the blue and of yellow, and shoes and gloves of yellow. Her bouquet, also early Victorian, was of talisman roses with variegated summer flowers.

Wears Wedgewood Lace.

The bride's mother wore Wedgewood blue lace, with small hat of baku trimmed in blue velvet ribbon and veil of blue, and her corsage was of red roses and blue delphinium. Mrs. Sevier, the bridegroom's mother, wore violet blue lace, with natural-color hat having a crown of flowers. Her corsage was of talisman roses.

The Rev. Mr. John Marvin, of Summit, N. J., was best man, and the ushers were Mr. Granger Williams, of Little Rock, Ark., and George Fain, of Hendersonville.

After a motor trip South, Mr. Sevier and his bride will reside at Hendersonville, where they will be at home after June 23.

Both Mr. and Mrs. Sevier are of French descent. Mr. Sevier's ancestor, the late Mr. John Sevier, for whom he is named, was the first Governor of Tennessee.

The bride's mother and brother will sail from San Francisco July 21 on their return to their home in Sidney.

Miss Barbour to Be Bride.

The wedding of Mr. Lowell Smith Dillingham, son of Mr. and Mrs. Walter F. Dillingham, of Honolulu, to Miss Harriet Barbour, daughter of Mr. and Mrs. John Edwards Barbour, of Kilbarchan, Paterson, N. J., will take place tomorrow at 4 p. m. at the Church of the Messiah, in Paterson. Dr. Robert R. Bryan will officiate. Following the ceremony there will be a reception on the lawns and in the garden of Kilbarchan.

Today's HEALTH TALK

By Dr. Irving S. Cutter.

How Sleep Relaxes.

Whenever we are tired nature demands that we apply the proper remedy—rest. If we can sleep—all the better—for the mind then becomes inactive and most of the processes of thought are temporarily in abeyance. Shakespeare calls sleep "nature's soft nurse." With the approach of nightfall all creation figuratively folds its tents and retires to the realm of the unknown. Man is the only living thing that has dared to flaunt the silence of the night and through inventions—called progress—prolong the day.

There is no tonic, stimulant, food or medicine equal to sleep in its power of restoring vital forces. The rate of breathing becomes slower, the amount of work required by the heart is reduced, and general metabolism (cell activity) is decreased.

And yet the individual is not profoundly unconscious. The intensity of noise necessary to awaken a sleeper varies with different individuals; in fact, much depends upon the reaction of the nervous system. A high strung person may waken many times during the night, although the total loss of sleep time may not be appreciable. In such a situation, however, general body activities are roused too frequently to permit of the maximum of rest. This can be understood when we consider that it takes some time for all the body functions to "settle down," as we say.

Brain Always Functions.

When one is well launched on a sleep program, glandular secretions are inhibited, with the possible exception of perspiration. Mental activity, however, never disappears completely. Dreams, brilliant thoughts or great plans may appear in that twilight zone that precedes deep sleep. Many an invention has been lost to posterity in the drowsy fog or half consciousness.

Yes, one can sleep too much—although this statement is heresy in some quarters. A span of eight hours, if unbroken, is not only needed, but is adequate for the normal adult.

Sleeplessness is one of our most common complaints. It is a definite deterrent to good health and occurs more frequently in individuals past middle life. While short spells of wakefulness are not important, longer intervals may indicate the presence of high blood pressure or arteriosclerosis.

Sometimes bad habits will need correction. One who craves excitement and spends a busy, active evening may not be able to relax for several hours. Much depends upon the heights to which the emotions have been raised, like the waters of a pond whipped by a strong wind into violent waves. Heavy midnight suppers are anything but sleep inducing.

Worry Destroys Rest.

Noise is a disturbing factor both during the night and early morning; likewise the morning sun. The bed should be wide and long enough to insure comfort, with a mattress and springs moderately rigid. Every one should sleep alone if it can be arranged, even though a narrower bed is used. Blankets and sheets tucked in tightly at the foot of the bed may make free movements of the feet impossible. The bedclothing may be too heavy, both in weight and warmth. Because one cannot sleep if he is cold the bedclothing should be sufficiently warm, but light in weight. Many a patient will complain of insomnia when the difficulty resolves itself in poor circulation with cold feet. Pain and worry are great destroyers of rest.

In the absence of some organic basis we can train ourselves in the art of sleep, first by conquering the fear that we will not sleep. Perhaps we can acquire an attitude of indifference. With a good bedside light and a smooth-flowing tale, turn the clock to the wall and enjoy the reading period. Do not try to plan every moment of tomorrow; you can't do it, so why waste the mental energy? If sedatives are required—let your physician prescribe.

Know All The Answers

THOSE THINGS you almost know—and don't! They give you a laugh, and a surprise.

Winnie and Fred are doing a lot of pencil-chewing to answer the teasers being tossed at them at Connie's party.

"Who was Bathsheba?"

"What is a jehad?"

"Where are the Carlsbad Caverns?"

"What is the capital of Nevada?"

"Which is larger, Rhode Island or Yellowstone Park?"

Winnie and Fred learn with surprise that Bathsheba was not the Queen of Sheba, but the wife of King David and the mother of Solomon. A jehad is not a coachman, it seems, but a Mohammedan war against "unbelievers." The Carlsbad Caverns are not in Austria or Germany, but in New Mexico. Carson City, not Reno, is the capital of Nevada, and Yellowstone Park is nearly three times the size of Rhode Island!

Our 40-page illustrated booklet, Can You Answer This One?, has over 500 of these wake-em-up questions. Some are on special subjects—history, literature, science. Others are general. All will arouse you to new enthusiasms, reveal the weak spots in your reading. Mighty valuable fun!

Woman Finds 'Ideal Career' TeachingRiding

Manager of Stable Had Never Been on Horse Until Year Ago.

By Hope Ridings Miller.

A YEAR and a half ago, Evelyn Dent had never even been on a horse. Now she is a riding instructor and manager of the stable at the Rock Creek Riding Club "all because Mr. Todd (head of the club) taught me how to ride and take care of horses; he helped me, in fact, to find the only vocation in the world for me," she said yesterday as she poured out a pan of oats for "Bucellus" and a measure of corn for "Jouster" and mixed some bran for the mother of the week-old colt, the newest addition to the stables.

When the feeding of her charges was finished and she had given some last-minute directions to "Shine," the colored boy who helps her, the youthful stable manager sat in her apartment, a walled-off corner of the stable, and told more of the work she wouldn't exchange for any you can name."

Thinks Career Is Ideal.

Looking more like a high-school pupil than an accomplished horsewoman, this 23-year-old Washingtonian is confident her career is an ideal one, and that she did a good day's work when she decided to take riding lessons "chiefly because everyone seemed to think I was sickly and needed some exercise. From the time I started riding regularly, I began to feel better, and since I've had this job, I haven't been ill a single day!"

For three years before she had worked in an office. Hadn't liked it. Watched the clock for the closing hour each day. Waited impatiently for vacations, and wondered if there was any work that an employe really enjoyed.

"But now the last thing I think of is how many hours I work each day, because what I do isn't really work," she said. "It's play."

Her play begins at daybreak ("that's about 4 o'clock now," she said). The first thing she does is to feed the horses. Then she grooms them, using a curry comb ("it brings the dirt to the surface"), then the dandy brush ("for dusting"), then a towel, and finally the body brush ("which smooths and shines"). After that she combs the horse's mane and tail and finishes by "washing out his eyes and nostrils with a damp cloth."

In this work and in cleaning and straightening the stable, "Shine helps," she said. After that she gives lessons. For several months she has conducted regular classes for 49 Girl Scouts.

Horses Have Personality.

She pointed out that methods of teaching under Mr. Todd's direction are unique. "He believes it is important for each pupil to get acquainted with the horse before he ever gets on it," she said. "And the best way to learn a horse's peculiarities—and they all have them—is to feed and groom it. So that's the first step in learning to ride."

She further explained that instruction is given at the end of a lead reign and that pupils learn to ride bareback "to develop balance and overcome dependence on the stirrup" before they ride in a saddle.

"Learning to fall without hurting yourself is another important part of those first lessons," she continued. "We teach that, too, although falls don't always follow."

The thrill of being a riding instructor is in noting a pupil's progress from the stage of being afraid of a horse or afraid of falling to learning how to take a steeplechase in its stride, she said.

"Then, too, I enjoy riding myself," she went on. "And I love looking after horses. Honestly, I feel as if every one of those ten out there is a person—a friend."

Confident that "every woman should be a horsewoman," she stressed that riding offers the solution of many feminine problems. "It's a fascinating hobby that ends boredom once and for all," she said. "It's the best exercise in the world, keeps one lithe and lean and develops grace. If you ride regularly, you never have to count your calories or worry about your complexion or your appetite. From the way I look at it," she added with a smile, "you don't have to worry about anything."

And as for the satisfaction of being a riding instructor or a stable manager—"well, take it from me," she said, her eyes shining, "I wouldn't change places or jobs with any girl in Washington!"

In fact, she is so absorbed in her work she doesn't mind if she never has a vacation, "unless it can be a horsey one," she added.

A Stable Manager and Her Youngest Charge

Pleasant Voice, Can Be Taught Growing Child

Many Women Retain Flat Tones of Infancy Through Life.

By Alice Clarissa Richmond.

"MR. SMITH is in conference and cannot be disturbed."

Perhaps the statement would not be so annoying if it were not made in a flat baby voice. Why grown women, old enough to be trusted in the business world should be unable to use adult voices with some overtones, is a lasting mystery.

The world is full of such flat, expressionless voices. One hears them in business, over the radio, in society—and they are not necessarily a sign of lack of mental development. Extremely efficient and capable women will use the voice of their childhood, so that anyone who heard the voice and never saw its owner would suppose that he was talking with a 10-year-old.

People are growing speech conscious. The meticulous use of the English language is improving every day. Such variations as the nasal twang, pronounced burrs and local dialects are on the wane. But the soft, fluting voice of the little child promises to become a popular affectation.

A girl's voice changes during her teens, as does a boy's, though not quite so noticeably. It gains in resonance, acquires overtones and volume. For a girl to cling to her undeveloped child's voice, is much the same thing as for a boy deliberately to cultivate a falsetto after his voice has changed.

Deep, abdominal breathing such as a singer uses, is good exercise for the undeveloped voice. Singing with relaxed vocal chords is also helpful.

Things That Make Women More Beautiful

New Powder Is Delicately Perfumed and Fine Grained.

By Mignon.

(The Mignon who writes this column does not sell, indorse or manufacture any cosmetics.)

STOP, look and listen!

I have been looking around for a face powder that was not too expensive yet had an exquisite daintiness of perfume and an extremely smooth texture—meaning that it has been sifted so many times through such fine silk that there isn't a grain to be found in it any place. In other words, it is powder that IS powder. Here it is:

First I'll let you see the box which is black with a beautiful French design in gold on it. It looks like porcelain or fine china of some sort and the fact that it isn't is somewhat of a comfort because I never heard of anyone collecting powder boxes, and if they are too expensive your conscience irks you when you throw them away. This box is so firm that you could refill it and it would still be beautiful.

The perfume used in the powder is one of the very finest that you can find anywhere. In fact, there is a great temptation to put your nose too close to it, draw in a breath and then start sneezing. It is a distinctly clean smell, one that you can't get too much of in a face powder and yet just enough to make other women ask "What is it?"

The price is certainly fair, even for something less beautiful than this. In fact, there are few places you could put that amount of money and get so much in return. I may sound prejudiced, but the only reason is that I am trying to help you to get something gorgebus and not spend too much money for it, and cosmetics, as you know, are something that a woman likes to experiment with if she is sure that they are good and that she is getting her money's worth.

MARY HAWORTH'S MAIL

Men Called 'Morally Rotten and Lazy, Hiding Behind Woman's Skirts Like Cowards They Are.'

And still they come—letters of scorn, of mirth, of indignation, of applause, of appraisal, from column readers who are following with what seems the keenest interest this discussion of men's and women's manners and morals, launched a week and a half ago by a bitter document from a woman who signed herself "Divorcee." Until this veritable tidal wave of interest subsides, I feel it is only fair to continue to print at least a portion of each day's mail received on the subject. M. H.

DEAR MARY HAWORTH: On June 9 I read a letter in your column written by "Mother of Two Girls." Honestly, Miss Haworth, in all my life I have never come across such absolutely nauseating unmitigated bilge. Do you suppose she really believes the things she wrote? If she does, then she certainly must be pitifully brainless and gullible. She says "(men) are not constructed to resist temptation," which is absolutely not true because I know a case of a man who successfully resisted almost irresistible temptation. What she means is that men are too morally rotten and lazy to resist temptation and that, in any event, they know they can always hide behind a woman's skirts like the cowards they are; that women like "Mother" will smile upon them and welcome them into their homes to do like damage to their daughters, if possible.

• • • •

As another correspondent in your column reflected: What right have men got, to do exactly as they please while they are unmarried and then expect to marry a nice girl? It's not right. I certainly hold no brief for women who lead lax moral lives, but to my mind they are no worse than the men with whom they associate. One is exactly as bad as the other, and in all fairness, the world should not receive the man and reject the woman. And as for the respectable people, the holier-than-thou's, instead of drawing their skirts aside from the streetwalkers and such, let them reflect: "There, but for the grace of God, go I."

• • • •

If "Mother" knew anything at all, she would know that men are out for all they can get. After they take you to a 35-cent show and buy you a 15-cent sandwich, then they are all ready for the real business of the evening. You refuse them and, as is often necessary, slap them; then they get mad, take you home, and that is that. They don't want nice girls. And if girls think, "Oh, well, what's the use of being nice and good?" and throw themselves away on some bum, who can blame them? I married a truly fine man and I thank heaven for my good fortune. I was very lucky. Most women are not.

• • • •

Judging from the vicious observations "Mother" made about women, and about the eternal man-woman question, I think she must be singularly naive, unsophisticated and exceedingly dumb. She must be possessed of an exceedingly narrow small mind if she objects so strenuously to the use of "paint" (as she calls rouge) and to smoking. But then she probably never sees what is going on around her, what with being so busy about the house and with bringing clean gaiety and purity into the lives of the poor dear men who are just dying to be good. She probably never sees that there are thousands and thousands of clean decent girls who are just as honorable as those of any generation before this. Personally, I think we other girls ought to rise up and give "Mother" a good hard kick to wake her up, and try to knock some sense into her silly head.

I'll bet she is a Southerner.

H. M.

"Mother" Applauded.

DEAR MARY HAWORTH: The reason I am writing you today is in praise of the letter written by "Mother of Two Girls." She hit the nail squarely on the head and I say she is exactly correct in everything she said. I intend to cut out and keep her letter. A more sensible document I never read in any column . . .

I know there are plenty of girls and boys, men and women, who are not decent, but that doesn't mean there aren't any decent people in the world. I could have gone with any number of the wrong kind, but as soon as they showed their true nature (they never did at first; always being very polite for the first couple of dates) I dropped them like hot cakes. And so could the rest of the people. I know there are persons like that, but they can be discouraged and sometimes reformed . . . I do want to praise "Mother's" letter . . . Sincerely, M. R.

Footloose Husbands.

DEAR MARY HAWORTH: " . . . All the men in his office do the same thing . . ." wrote your correspondent of June 9 who signed herself "Wife." She was saying that for the past 20 years her husband had spent money on liquor, cars and women. I wish to agree in part with her statement. But I wish also to add that there are many fine, good men who possess a full knowledge of their responsibilities toward their families and toward society. Let us look at the first group a moment. I must leave out of it the immoral and unmoral men, for I do not know a man who answers that description.

• • • •

For 20 years I have worked where many men are employed, and occasionally, when a man's family is away for the summer, I have gone either to a movie, to dinner or for a drive with one married man or another; never more than twice a year at most, however. My reason for so doing is that I have seen such a man restless and lonely, temporarily footloose, and I have gone out with him to keep him out of worse mischief. I felt that I knew his children, his whole family, through having listened to day-by-day stories of their ailments and their progress.

• • • •

Of course, they usually try to kiss me; once one of them succeeded in landing a kiss on the back of my neck as I climbed out of his car. But the gesture was harmless. Their attempts at lovemaking are based on one of two things: either he thinks it is the thing to do under such circumstances, or else he thinks he is being a devil.

• • • •

When I am going out with a married man I deliberately select the most expensive place with the thought in mind that if I stepped on his purse hard enough, he wouldn't ask me again . . .

A wife should be patient, loving and understanding toward her husband, for she holds the key to his happiness. She should be kind to the woman who works. We know in our hearts there is no greater institution than a happy home and no substitute for right living.

155 Students Are Graduated By Columbus U.

Largest Class in History of School Hears Talk by William Leahy.

Law is a never-ending highway that had its beginnings in some long-forgotten yesterday and will roll on through the civilization of the vague tomorrows of years to come—as long as man feels the need for government—William H. Leahy, president of Columbus University, told 155 students who were awarded law and accountancy degrees at the university's annual commencement exercises last night at Memorial Continental Hall.

"But a new era has sprung up in the practice of law," he warned the young barristers. "Once men in helter-skelter fashion learned the law in a law office. That day is gone forever. The time is now come when some systematized method of training for the legal profession is necessary."

Before him as he spoke was the largest graduating class in Columbus University's history. The members were dressed in caps and gowns.

Coupled Honored.

Before him was a married couple who studied law together and gained degrees together last night. They were Mr. and Mrs. William Francis Goddard.

The following prizes were awarded to students of the school of law: Master of laws scholarship to T. Loehl O'Brien for attaining highest average in three-year course; Dean John R. Fitzpatrick prize for the student of the second year attaining the highest average for two years to Herbert B. Hulze; Charles W. Darr memorial prize for the student attaining highest average for the first year to Edward A. Dent, jr.

Dr. Cyril Wynne prize for the best thesis on "due process" in the trial of Bruno Richard Hauptmann, to William F. Cusick; Sigma Delta Kappa prize for its member attaining the highest average in the senior class, to J. Louis O'Connor.

Mary Grace Augherton and Marion Toomey were winners of the prize debate, and Miss Toomey also was awarded a prize as the best debater in the law school. The William A. Roberts prize for the best paper on the current law of sales was given C. Kelker Young. The award to the student attaining the highest rating in patent law went to Clarence R. Gorman. Elizabeth Eagan and J. Louis O'Connor won the prizes for the best work in moot court. The Robert E. Lynch prize for legal bibliography work went to Gordon T. O'Hanlon.

Accountancy Awards.

In the School of Accountancy, prizes for extraordinary scholastic attainments went to Albert C. Christian, W. Hugh McNaughton, Elizabeth McGahey and Louis J. Urciolo. Debating prizes were awarded to Bernard Bilicki and Paul Finzel. Eleanor Peterson and Helen Morris were awarded prizes as the most deserving students in the school.

More than 1,000 persons were present for the exercises. The Rev. John C. Cartwright gave the invocation, and after he finished George E. Herring, chairman of the university's board of trustees, made an address of welcome. Herring assisted in awarding degrees upon graduates. John R. Fitzpatrick, dean of the school of law, made awards for the law school, and James D. Cushman, dean of the school of accountancy, made the awards for his department.

The list of graduates follows:

Employes Cite 'Obstinacy' of Owners; Shortage of Meat Feared.

By the Associated Press.

Paris, June 10.—A general strike of hotel cafe and restaurant employes in the Paris region was voted tonight as a possible cleavage in the government's Leftist majority over the 40-hour week bill was seen.

The new strikers joined the ranks of hundreds of thousands of others who are demanding more money and shorter hours, and all of whom are awaiting Parliamentary decision on the labor bills of Premier Leon Blum before returning to work.

Several cafes already were in darkness tonight and the tables had been removed from sidewalk cafes for which Paris boulevards are famous.

Obstinacy Cited.

The union announced the strike was called "in view of the obstinacy of the proprietors."

If fully effective, all cafes and restaurants presumably will be closed by tomorrow. Hotel cafes were without staffs.

A possible threat to the city's meat supply also was seen when 8,000 butcher boys voted to strike tomorrow.

The measures were introduced yesterday and sent to a special parliamentary committee.

Roger Salengro, minister of the interior, tackled the strike in northern mills, where workers showed little disposition to end their walkout until new privileges are guaranteed by Parliament.

(The five principal demands of strikers were granted Monday in a general agreement, which included wage increases of from 7 to 15 per cent, recognition of unions and collective bargaining, a 40-hour week and paid vacations.

Situation Easier.

(Northern miners went on strike immediately after the agreement was signed.)

Although there were isolated disorders, the strike situation was easier throughout the country.

The government's Leftist "Peoples' Front," holding a majority in the Chamber of Deputies, is united behind the government's program except for the 40-hour week bill.

Business men warned the 40-hour week, along with wage increases, would bring the total extra cost to employers to about 35 per cent, raising prices and further cutting France's diminishing foreign trade.

Machine Guns Used by Rioters In Spanish City

Spanish Reds, Syndicalists Clash; 3 More Dead in Strike Riots.

By the Associated Press.

Madrid, June 10.—Communists and Syndicalists fought a pitched machine-gun battle in the streets of Malaga late today, while Spain counted three more dead and unnumbered wounded in politico-strike disorders.

Bullets whined through Malaga's main thoroughfares after two persons had been slain and Socialists had called a general strike.

The Syndicalist leader, Miguel Ortiz Aceveds, was cut down as he carried a baby out of his house. The baby was unhurt. The slaying followed the street killing of a Communist lawyer.

In Aznalcazar, Seville province, Antonio Ramirez, Socialist chief, was killed during a political quarrel. Baldajoz saw numerous armed clashes between Leftists and Rightists. The number wounded was not estimated.

Police reserves rushed into Malaga from surrounding areas when the rioters brought machine guns into play. The fighting still was going on late in the afternoon.

Two National Workers' Federation centers were destroyed by fire and the Socialist headquarters was besieged for a time.

Another general strike was declared at Estepa, Seville province, but there were no disorders. Civil guards were ordered to Estepa.

Madrid's labor situation improved somewhat with the return of striking Syndicalist waiters, a compromise on a strike involving elevator mechanics and the reopening of cafes.

Strikes and political violence have claimed nearly 180 lives since the Leftist government won power in the February elections.

'Girl Pat,' Treasure Hunt Craft Of Mystery, Sighted Off Guiana

Motor Vessel Trailed Through Seven Seas After Charge of Marine Theft; Reported to Be Manned by British Fisherman.

Georgetown, British Guinana, June 10 (AP).—The British mystery ship "Girl Pat," whose queer antics excited African and European ports, was reported today to have been sighted off the coast of South America, flying a distress signal.

The motor vessel is said to be in search of pirate gold. Charges of marine theft have been filed by the English owners of the vessel but they and underwriters have not been able to catch her. Several adventurous English fishermen were said to be manning the ship.

(Since slipping out of Dover early in April without notifying port authorities, the Girl Pat appeared at Corcubion, Spain, and Dakar, Senegal, leaving both ports without the usual notification.)

Every ship in the Caribbean and on the northern coast of South America was watching for her following a report by the steamer Lorraine Cross she sighted the Girl Pat yesterday morning 47 miles off the coast of French Guiana, heading southwest.

The elusive vessels made off on being questioned, the steamer advised by wireless.

The captain of the Lorraine Cross said he saw four men aboard the mystery ship, who claimed their vessel was the Margaret Harold, registered in London and bound for Trinidad via Gibraltar. The captain said the name Girl Pat had been painted out.

They reported they had no fuel or food, but when asked by the captain of the Lorraine Cross about documents, he reported, the men immediately hauled down the distress signal, hoisted sail and left before assistance could be granted.

Infantile Paralysis Tests Held Faulty

Chicago, June 10 (AP).—A five-year study of infantile paralysis was ended today with a report in which three researchers said accepted methods of testing man's immunity to the disease were not reliable.

The procedure in the tests have been to draw a sample of blood from the human subject, mix it with the virus which causes the paralysis, and inject the mixture into a monkey. If the blood contained antibodies able to kill the virus, the monkey did not get sick and the blood donor was considered immune.

Long experiments have proved, however, said the three doctors—N. Paul Hudson, of Columbus, Ohio, and Edwin H. Lennette and Francis B. Gordon, of Chicago—that this method fails to take proper consideration of the fact that the virus attacks through the nervous system and not directly through the blood vessels.

Clifton Park Girl Hurt Seriously in Car Crash

Miss Eunice Gill, 17, daughter of Mr. and Mrs. John Gill, of Clifton Park, Md., was in a serious condition at Washington Sanitarium and Hospital, Takoma Park, Md., yesterday as the result of an automobile accident.

Miss Gill was treated for a crushed chest and head. She is a member of the graduating class at Montgomery Blair High School. She was injured when an automobile driven by her brother, Douglas Gill, was in collision with a car operated by Frank Gregory, of Schickshinny, Pa., at Sligo and Flower avenue, Takoma Park.

Black Legion's 'Torch' Leader Tells of Arson

Detroit Prosecutor Says Squad's Duty Was to Burn Reds' Homes.

By the Associated Press.

Detroit, June 10.—A roving Black Legion "torch squad" which was directed by code messages from high offices of the terrorist society to hunt out and burn homes of suspected Communists was disclosed today, Prosecutor Duncan C. McCrea announced, by statements of four men.

The four are Frank Rice, an investigator for the Packard Motor Car Co.; Clarence Frye, a foreman in the Dodge truck division of the Chrysler Corporation; Albert Swanson, Detroit City Gas Co. meter reader, and Roy Hepner, a painter and decorator.

McCrea said the men confessed setting fire to the home of William F. Mollenhauer, in Oakland County, in 1934, and that they admitted they were officers in the Black Legion.

A fifth man was detained for questioning about the arson squad. He is Elvis Clark, a foreman at the Ternstedt Manufacturing Co.

Hepner is to be the first witness tomorrow before the State grand jury investigating night-riding activities of the Black Legion.

Frye, a former Detroit policeman, said in a long statement that he was forced into the Black Legion against his will, and threatened with violence against his 8-year-old daughter as well as himself if he refused to take command of the arson squad.

The State grand jury jailed Rudyard K. Wellman today for 30 days for contempt of court for "lying" in his testimony regarding a Black Legion flogging of Wellman's brother, Marcus.

In Pontiac, Buel A. Doelle, assistant attorney general, announced the grand jury there would "smoke out the Black Legion members and sift their activities no matter where it may hit."

Members of a citizens' committee, which charges the Black Legion had members in numerous public offices in Oakland County, were among the first witnesses.

Haile Selassie Visited By Duke of Gloucester

London, June 10 (AP).—The Duke of Gloucester, a brother of King Edward VIII, paid a 15-minute courtesy call upon Emperor Haile Selassie.

Some political quarters wondered whether tacit recognition by Great Britain of Italy's conquest of Ethiopia was to be inferred from a court circular announcing the visit.

2 More Insane Convicts Retaken, 5 Still at Large

St. Peter, Minn., June 10 (AP).—Melvin C. Passolt, superintendent of the State bureau of criminal apprehension, announced the capture today of two more insane criminals, leaving only 5 of 16 who broke out of the State Asylum Sunday night still at large.

P.U.C. Begins Move to Slash 'Phone Rates

Survey Indicates Profit of Company Exceeds Legal Return.

Commission Asks Firm to File New Report on Valuation.

Machinery to bring about reduction in telephone rates of the Chesapeake & Potomac Telephone Co. was set in motion by the Public Utilities Commission yesterday.

Preliminary investigation by the commission indicates the company is earning in excess of the permitted 6 per cent on its rate base, Riley E. Elgen, commission chairman, said in a letter to Lloyd B. Wilson, telephone president.

Reports made by the company show net revenues, exclusive of taxes, amounting to $785,000 during the first four months of the current calendar year. This is about $44,000 more than the $741,000 earned during the same period last year.

On the basis of the company earnings last year the commission reduced rates to a point where it was estimated the revenues of the compan this year would be cut $300,000. Earnings last year amounted to $2,173,000. The company valuation now is approximately $33,000,000. This is made up of $29,860,000 fixed by the commission for rate-making purposes as of September 15, 1932, plus $3,000,000 expended for capital improvements.

Information Sought.

The commission asked the company for its determination as to the return being made at the present time. Elgen said the commission initiated the move at this time so as to be prepared to reach a decision on rates at the earliest possible moment.

Rate reductions, however, are not expected to be made for several months, at least. The company is expected to reply to Elgen's letter in a few days. Then the commission will have to get ready for a public hearing, employ such expert assistance as may be deemed desirable and prepare its own data. Ten days' notice of its intention to hold a public hearing must be given. An additional ten days must be allowed before the hearing may be held, under the law. How long the hearing itself might take is problematical. After that the commission must reach its decision and prepare its reduction order in such a manner that the new rate schedule shall not carry the earnings of the company below the rate of return it is allowed.

Plan for Change Dropped.

Study of a plan to turn the District's telephone system over to the Chesapeake & Potomac Telephone Co. for operation by it has been suspended temporarily, Richard B. Keech, vice chairman of the commission, announced yesterday.

At present the District telephone, fire alarm and police patrol signal systems are operated together, and Walter E. Kern, electrical engineer, is making a study of the amount and location of the properties used for each service.

"In view of the study being made by Mr. Kern, as well as the fact that in the not too distant future the wire center may be changed as a result of development of the Municipal Center, this matter should be temporarily suspended," Keech said.

The study had been initiated by the commission to determine whether the telephone company could operate the service at less cost to the District. Opposition had been expressed to the change by both Kern and by Capt. Howard F. Clark, Assistant Engineer Commissioner, following a study for several weeks.

T. B. Program Outlined.

Ranking Pupils Special Guests Of Rotary Club

School Seniors, Confident, Tell Diners of Plans for Careers.

College graduates still may bewail the lack of opportunities today for young people, but the boys finishing high school this year are convinced "there's always room at the top." All they ask is a chance to prepare themselves for the careers of their choice.

That was the view yesterday of five seniors at the annual Rotary Club luncheon in honor of an outstanding member of each of Washington's high school graduating classes.

The five, selected by their principals, were Charles Friede, of McKinley, son of Mr. and Mrs. Charles Friede, 858 Whittier place northwest; Robert B. Spilman, of Central, son of Mrs. Bertha Spilman, 1645 Hobart street; Francis T. Shinn, of Western, son of Mr. and Mrs. Arthur T. Shinn, 1863 Mintwood place; David Pitcher, of Roosevelt, son of David Lester Pitcher, of the United States Soldiers' Home, and Robert S. Clements, of Eastern, son of Mr. and Mrs. Stephen A. Clements, 1228 Morse street northeast.

In confident voices the five seniors told the Rotarians and their wives—it was also Ladies' Day of the club—that all they desire out of life is a chance to do their bit and to make the world a better place for their fellowmen. Four of the five intend to become engineers of one sort or another. The fifth is going to be a business man, probably a financier.

Spilman, who plans to study mechanical engineering, first at George Washington and then at Lehigh, said he believes "a man can find a job after college if he's good enough."

"The question," he added, "is: Is he really good enough?" The Spilman lad was captain of this year's winning cadet company.

Clements, after explaining that he was "reluctant to disclose his plans for the future at this time," announced he is hoping to get a scholarship to Massachusetts Institute of Technology so he may study aeronautical engineering.

The Shinn youth, who is going in for business instead of engineering, said his plans "for the future beyond the coming year are somewhat nebulous," but he hopes to enroll this fall in Wharton School of Finance. He already has had some experience in business through presenting marionette shows and plans to take his puppets on a tour this summer.

Charles Friede is going to study chemical engineering. Pitcher wants to be a mining engineer and hopes to win a scholarship to the Colorado School of Mines.

Dr. Frank Ballou, superintendent of schools, was in charge of the luncheon program. Members of the board of education were guests. Roland Whitehurst, president of Rotary, presided. About 300 attended.

Mother of 7 Routes Gunman to Protect $10 in Till of Store

But there is something more than fear, and that is the vision of what $10 in the cash register would buy her youngsters.

She rushed at the colored man, who fled. Then she locked the door and called police. Last night they had not apprehended the robber.

Hazen Foresees Fund Appeal To White House

Crippling of Agencies Held Likely if Continuing Resolution Fails.

Several District agencies may be seriously crippled during the next fiscal year if Congress fails to enact the pending appropriation bill and provide for the National Capital by means of a resolution continuing appropriations of the current year into the next.

District officials consider the matter a serious one and Commissioner Melvin C. Hazen said it would be considered at a meeting of the Commissioners tomorrow.

Appeal directly to the President may be made by the Commissioners, Hazen said. Decision of a course of action will not be made until next week, he said. Meanwhile, Maj. Daniel J. Donovan, District auditor and budget officer, is completing a study of the situation.

Among institutions which might be seriously handicapped under a continuing resolution, Maj. Donovan pointed out, are the tuberculosis sanatorium at Glenn Dale, Md., Gallinger Hospital, the sewage treatment plant at Blue Plains, and others.

The health department might be forced to abandon its nursing service, and its anti-tuberculosis work under the tuberculosis director; the fire department would lose funds with which to purchase nine needed pieces of fire apparatus, and might be forced to cut its personnel; playgrounds activities would have to be curtailed and the sewer, water, and police departments would be adversely affected, it was said.

Losses might total as much as $8,500,000 from the total carried in the appropriation bill as passed by the Senate and now blocked in conference, it was estimated.

Nine Moons of Jupiter Swing Into Sight of Earth Tonight

Planet Is Nearer Than at Any Time During Past Five Years; Even Binoculars May Catch Some of Satellites.

All nine of Jupiter's moons will be visible tonight for the first time in five years because the planet will be nearer earth than it has been since 1931.

Jupiter has nine moons to the earth's one. The biggest is as big as the earth's, and the smallest is just an oversized rock—15 miles in diameter.

Once every five years in its journey around the sun Jupiter gets closest to the earth.

Persons who have binoculars will be able to see many of the moons. With telescopes all nine may be seen.

Eleven years is a year for Jupiter, because the bulky planet has an orbit much longer than the earth's.

Those nine moons—scientists who have studied the situation on Jupiter say—makes it light on that planet all day and all night. In the day, of course, it's day. At night it's just twilight because the moons reflect so much light from the sun.

There is a theory that our earth had that many moons once, too, in the process of its existence.

Hospitalized Men Will Get Bonus First

But General Distribution Will Not Begin Until 5:30 P.M. Monday.

Roosevelt Asks Banks to Help Veterans in Cashing Checks.

Veterans in hospitals and military stations are to reecive their bonus bonds before regular deliveries are started Monday night, it was announced yesterday by Vincent C. Burke, city postmaster.

Bond distributions to former service men now confined to Army and Navy medical institutions will begin Monday morning and continue throughout the day. Regular mail carriers and "certifying officers" will visit Walter Reed, Marine Barracks, Soldiers' Home, Chevy Chase Sanatorium, Tuberculosis Hospital, Naval Hospital and Army War College.

Delivery to other veterans in the Washintgon area will not begin until 5:30 p. m. Government departments will not receive deliveries until Tuesday. The general delivery window at the postoffice will not be open Monday, but will open Tuesday morning.

A special "adjustment unit" will be established at the Postoffice to aid in identifications. This bureau will open at 8 a. m. Tuesday and remain open daily from 8 to 10 p. m.

Veterans who are unable to write their names, Burke announced, may make an "X" mark when signing for their bonds and checks. This type of signature, however, must be witnessed by someone who vouches for the signer's identity.

President Roosevelt addressed to "all banks" a request for co-operation by cashing "promptly and in full" all Government checks issued in connection with the soldiers' bonus.

The letter was distributed through the Federal Reserve System to the 12 Federal Reserev banks, which in turn transmitted the Chief Executive's message to all banks in the various reserve districts.

Priests Help Launch Builders' Society

St. Anthony's Drive for New Church Started

175 Men of Parish Honor Rev. Conroy; $14,700 Is Subscribed.

At a testimonial dinner in the Willard Hotel in honor of their pastor, the Right Rev. Patrick E. Conroy, 175 men of St. Anthony's Parish last night launched a builders' society and subscribed $14,700 toward a fund for a new church.

The guest speaker at the dinner was Father John F. White, pastor of the Church of the Immaculate Conception, at Stapleton, N. Y., and treasurer of the Catholic Actors Guild.

Father White, a former Fordham baseball player, cited the importance of the church and asked each man present to do his part in contributing to the fund.

After an introduction by Charles A. McMahon, toastmaster, Father Conroy reviewed the accomplishments of the parish since he became pastor in 1927. He spoke of the necessity for a new church edifice and of his hope tat te presnn ent drive would be successful.

Other speakers were the Right Rev. Mgr. Peter Guilday, former pastor of St. Anthony's and now of Catholic University; the Rev. Charles R. O'Hara, pastor of St. Mary's Church at Rockville, Md.; the Rev. Thomas E. Sweeney, assistant pastor of St. Anthony's; F. V. Murphy, who has been named architect of the proposed structure, and Dr. George Ellis, head of the committee conducting the drive for funds.

Dr. Ellis announced that the drive itself would begin Sunday. It is planned to erect the new church at Twelfth and Monroe streets northeast.

Jury Indicts Dr. Rutherford For Operation

Octogenarian Is Charged in Woman's Death; 23 True Bills Returned.

The District Grand Jury yesterday indicted Dr. Jesse B. Rutherford, octogenarian physician, on a charge of performing an illegal operation that resulted in the death of a young woman several weeks ago. The indictment was one of 23 returned to Justice Daniel W. O'Donoghue in the District Supreme Court.

In another presentment, the Grand Jury charged William J. Nolan and Francis M. Kearney with bribery. The two are alleged to have bribed two witnesses to leave town on the eve of a divorce suit.

Those indicted: Lester Blackwell, Raymond Keyser, James R. Shields, Richard Franklin and James E. Thomas, joy riding; Helmuth Fischer, grand larceny; William Harris, Elizabeth Bates, Leonard Crawford, Isaac Kee, John Smith, Estell Jones, Waddell Evans, Roosevelt Howell and Allen B. Ford, housebreaking; Walter H. Pritter, violation of section 851-b, D. C. code.

Samuel Petticerw, Doris Rucker, Charles V. Anthony, Jessie M. Scott, Raymond C. Carper, assault with a dangerous weapon; Agnes Lucille Brown, mayhem; Lawrence Cook, arson; Robert F. Parker, William H. Strickland and Bryan Schwab, forgery and uttering; James A. McEaddy and Samuel Caruso, violation of the liquor taxing act of 1934; Joseph F. Murray, Pearly Louise Simmons, James E. Simmons, Charles E. Pinkney, Elliott Rattley, James T. Brooks, Louis G. Cooper, Elaine J. Harris, Leon L. Irving and Alice L. White, gaming charges.

Jesse B. Rutherford, abortion; William J. Nolan and Francis M. Kearney, bribery.

Those against whom the grand jury ignored charges were: Charles L. Harris and Logan J. Newmen, assault with a dangerous weapon; John Jones, housebreaking; James T. Seekford and Andrew Golian, robbery; Joseph Jones, violation of section 851-b, D. C. code; and Charlie Miller, violation of section 851-b, D. C. code.

D. C. Man Flees Maryland Jail On Eve of Federal Transfer

Gordon Schofield, 24, of Washington, broke from the Takoma Park (Md.) Jail yesterday afternoon in time to avoid being turned over to Department of Justice agents.

The Department of Justice men were to bring Schofield to this city to answer charges of transporting a stolen automobile across a State boundary. The car, owned by Samuel M. Campanelli, of 7104 Ninth street northwest, was taken Monday night.

Schofield, found sleeping on the porch of a Takoma Park residence late Monday night, was arrested and held for investigation. The stolen automobile was found abandoned in nearby Maryland.

According to Takoma Park police, Schofield's fingerprints matched those on the car. The Department of Justice was notified and their agents were expected to arrive yesterday.

But Schofield took matters into his own hands, tore away the bar holding the lock on his cell and escaped through either a rear door or window. At the time of the break there was no one in the police station but a clerk, who was in a separate part of the building.

Status of Job Left in Doubt By Babcock

He Won't Say Whether He Is Still A. F. G. E. Head or Not.

No Comment on Leave; Rift With Executive Council Widens.

Alternately jovial and serious, E. Claude Babcock yesterday refused to state whether or not he is still president of the American Federation of Government Employes as the drift widened between the national executive council and himself.

"I have nothing to say," he replied, when asked if he had begun his furlough with pay and turned the presidential duties over to Mrs. Bernice Heffner, national secretary of the Federal clerk's union.

On Tuesday he asked the council to approve his request for leave of absence until the September convention of the A. F. G. E., and, according to Babcock, the request was granted. He said he would step down immediately in favor of Mrs. Heffner, who was to carry on as acting president.

Yesterday, however, Babcock is reported to have changed his mind, charging the council with violating an agreement to hold the controversy in abeyance until the national convention in Detroit, September 14. The present subject of argument between the A. F. G. E. head and his official staff is his authorship of a pamphlet attacking the alleged spoils system of the Roosevelt Administration.

Until yesterday Babcock was liberal with statements pertaining to his squabble with the executive council majority which is seeking his ouster. But when he was asked yesterday to confirm reports that he might not take a three months' vacation with pay, as he said Tuesday he would do, whether the executive council approved or not, his only answer was:

"I have nothing to say."

Mrs. Heffner declined to admit or deny she is acting president, referring the query to the equally uncommunicative Babcock.

Capt. Clark Feted By D. C. Employes

District officials and employes bade farewell to Capt. Howard F. Clark, prinicpal assistant to the Engineer Commissioner, at an informal party in the District Building yesterday.

Capt. Clark ended his tour of duty with the District and is to go to Fort Bliss, Tex., under orders. He served the District for four years.

Capt. Robert E. York, another assistant Engineer Commissioner, is to leave the District service next month. He has been ordered to the Command and General Staff School of the Army at Fort Leavenworth, Kans.

Capt. Patrick Tansey and Capt. Don Shingler, now at the school, are to replace Capt. Clark and Capt. York.

Fright Is Out In Camp of Schmeling

Applies Self to Strict Training; Nightly Sleep Unbroken.

By the United Press.

Napanoch, N. Y., June 10.—The ghostly figure of Joe Louis hasn't cast its shadow over Max Schmeling's camp during 41 days of training in this upstate retreat, 90 miles from Yankee Stadium, where the two ring warriors will meet in their international heavyweight bout a week from Thursday night.

By day Schmeling tends strictly to the business of conditioning himself for a 15-round fight, and by night he sleeps soundly in his cottage nestling in the foothills of the Catskill Mountains. The nightmares that wrecked Max Baer's nerves, the fears that assailed Carnera, the doubts which disturbed Paolino Uzcudum, King Levinsky and Charlie Retzlaff—none of these has seized the stout-hearted Teuton.

Day or night, Schmeling gives no time or thought to the mighty brown man. He does not read the American newspapers, only the German paper, the New York Staats-Zeitung. He lives with his trainer, Max Machon; his chef, Joe Daschner; his friend, Otto Petri, former six-day bike rider, and his bodyguard, Joe Polumbo, State trooper. There is no talk about Louis except when the newspapermen visit Max at his cottage.

Talks Readily.

Schmeling does not dodge questions about Louis. He will talk readily about him, but when he talks about him it is in a different kind of language from Baer, Levinsky, Retzlaff and the others. They talked with the bravado of a frightened darky whistling in a graveyard—a man trying to keep up his courage.

"Frighten me," Schmeling said today in broken English. "Louis will never frighten me. He may whip me, but he'll have to do it in the ring. Of course, I do not think he will whip me. I think I will beat him. But if you think that Louis will win, why I am not going to try to make you change your mind by talking to you. I'll just ask you to wait until the fight and look for yourself."

Schmeling has trained earnestly since he arrived here May 1. He came here weighing 196. He now scales 193, and will come in weighing 190. He has boxed 15 times, about 90 rounds. On the days he didn't box he did 5 to 6½ miles of roadwork. In his boxing he has looked bad at times, but a training bout is the poorest place in the world to judge a fighter except as far as his condition is concerned. Max appears to be in condition, perhaps the best he has attained since his great victory over Paolino Uzcudun in 1929.

In yesterday's workout Schmeling was hitting with precision and power, and obviously could have inflicted more punishment than he did on his sparmates, and probably have bowled them over.

On his apparent condition and his courage—if it holds up till the opening gong—you have to give the German a chance against Louis.

Eric Pedley on Scoring Spree; U. S. Poloists Top British, 10-9

By the Associated Press.

London, June 10.—Fighting with unexpected fierceness and effect against the smashing power of the American attack, Great Britain's gallant four horsemen today came thrillingly close to springing the biggest polo upset since the war before yielding finally, 10 goals to 9, in the opening match of the international cup series at the Hurlingham Club.

With California's sharpshooting Eric Pedley riding in centaur fashion and scoring nine goals, thereby equaling his own record for cup competition, America's latest "big four" squeezed out their 1-point margin of triumph only after nipping a furious British rally in the seventh and last period.

A fashionable crowd of 10,000 witnessed the triumph engineered by the dazzling Pedley. It was the ninth straight victory for the Americans in cup competition since 1921 and the closest since 1914.

British Underdogs.

After taking the field underdogs at 5-to-1 odds with virtually no "takers" in sight, the English side, paced by H. Hesketh Hughes, unleashed an onslaught that took the spectators by complete, ecstatic surprise and momentarily nonplussed the invaders.

Pedley, named to the American team two months ago after the withdrawl of Tommy Hitchcock, equalled his own record for individual scoring in cup competition, made in the second match of the 1930 series at Meadow Brook, Long Island.

The sharpshooting Californian's feat only slightly overshadowed the accurate stickwork of Hughes, England's No. 1. Scoring seven goals, Hughes played inspired polo, belying earlier reports he was a weak link in the British team, which was revamped after injury forced out Rao Rajah Hanut Singh, eight-goal Indian star.

After rolling up a 7-3 lead in the first three periods on six goals by Pedley and one by Guest, back and captain of the invaders, the Americans suffered a sinking spell in the fourth chukker when the Gerald Balding - to - Hughes combination leaped to life. Hughes tallied three times, pulling the English to 6-7 while holding the Americans scoreless.

Balding, the nine-goal Irish star, who is well known to American galleries, paved the way to knot the score at the opening of the sixth period. He dribbled the ball nearly the whole length of the field and then passed it to Capt. Humphrey P. Guinness, British back, who scored from a sharp angle.

Pedley Scores.

Only five seconds elapsed, however, when Pedley sent America in front again, 8-7, and then the Californian took the ball away from Guinness in an exciting riding duel and scored with two perfect smashes. Pedley scored for the ninth and last time on a drive from Stewart Iglehart as the Bell ended the period.

Rain-swollen skies threatened a deluge as the final chukker began with Balding scoring on Eric Tyrrell-Martin's pass. Hughes pulled England up another notch, and then the match ended on a hair-raising note. Iglehart crossed Tyrrell-Martin, giving England a free shot for the tying goal in the last 90 seconds, but Balding missed.

Balding, on his free try, hit a terrific shot which struck Pedley square in the midriff. The big fellow grasped his side in apparent pain and then wheeled swiftly, caught the ball neatly on his stick and belted it down the field out of danger.

Pirates Thump Dodgers; Take 2d Place

By the Associated Press.

Pittsburgh, June 10.—The Pirates took sole possession of second place in the National League today and pulled up to 3½ games from the pace-setting Cardinals by winning their fifth straight game, a 6-to-3 triumph over the Brooklyn Dodgers.

The win gave the Pirates a clean sweep of the four-game series with the Dodgers, and stretched the Brooklyn losing streak to seven.

Red Lucas pitched shutout ball until the seventh, when three hits brought in a run. He got into trouble in the ninth, however, when, with two out, Brooklyn scored two runs on four straight singles. Guy Bush, rushed in for relief, ended the rally.

The Pirates got to Southpaw Bill Clark for a run in the third on Lucas' double and Fred Schulte's single, added two more in the fifth on four singles, scored another in the sixth on Gus Suhr's seventh homer, and closed out their run-making with two more in the eighth on Cookie Lavagetto's single and a pair of Brooklyn errors.

All-Star Post Of Cochrane In Doubt

Illness of Tiger Pilot May Cause Change in July 7 Game Plans.

New Manager Would Be Named; Dickey Likely Catching Choice.

Boston, June 10 (U.P.).—Illness of Manager Mickey Cochrane of the world champion Detroit Tigers may have far-reaching effects on the fourth annual all-star major league game at National League field here July 7, officials in charge of the classic feared tonight.

As pilot of the 1935 American League pennant winner, Cochrane was named to manage stars of the junior circuit who will attempt to clinch their fourth consecutive verdict over the National League representatives.

The pepper pot backstop of the Tigers was forced to quit his club in the midst of the Red Sox series here last night and return to Detroit after it was found he was suffering from an ailment diagnosed as hyperthyroidism. It was understood he would be confined to a hospital for at least ten days.

Voting Upset.

Should the illness become prolonged, however, it may mean Mickey will be forced to relinquish the job as manager of the American League All-Stars. Following problems would then result:

1. A new pilot would have to be named for the American Leaguers to handle the July 7 game.

2. Selections of thousands of fans throughout the country would be upset. Cochrane is No. 1 choice to do the catching for the American Leaguers in a nation-wide newspaper poll of fans who have the privilege of choosing 16 of the 21 players on each team.

Just who would be named to pilot the American Leaguers in the event Cochrane has not recovered by that time loomed as a perplexing problem. The possibility existed that Mickey's successor would be Manager Joe McCarthy of the New York Yankees, since the Gothamites were runners-up to the Tigers last season.

If Cochrane is unable to participate in the all-star game, the catching assignment probably will go to Bill Dickey of the Yankees, Billy Sullivan of the Cleveland Indians, or Rick Ferrell of the Boston Red Sox, who trail in that order in popular balloting.

Cubs Down Phils, 4-3, On Ken O'Dea's Double

Chicago, June 10 (AP).—A single by Ken O'Dea with the bases loaded and two out in the ninth drove across the two runs that gave the Cubs a 4-to-3 victory over Philadelphia today. The triumph gave the champions a clean sweep of the three-piece series and extended their victory streak to seven games.

After nursing a 3-to-2 lead from the third inning, Fabian Kowalik, young right-hander sent to the Phils by the Cubs in the Klein-Davis deal last month, and who was making his first start of the season, walked Hack with two out in the ninth. Billy Herman lined a double to right, sending Hack to third. Galan was purposely passed, filling the bases. Kowalik was replaced by Sylvester Johnson. O'Dea lifted a short looping single to center and Hack and Herman came in with the winning run.

Red Sox Collect 5 Hits, Defeat Tigers, 4-3

Werber's Homer Scores 2 Ahead of Him, Yankees' Lead Cut to 2 Games.

Boston, June 10 (AP).—The Red Sox used every one of their five hits today to finish on top of the Detroit Tigers, 4 to 3, in a close pitching duel, with Wes Ferrell nosing out rookie Clarence Phillips for the hurling honors.

Although outhit, 8 to 5, the Sox capitalized every safe blow. They scored three runs in the second when Bill Werber lifted a home run over the leftfield wall, scoring Jimmy Foxx, who had singled, and Flit McNair, who had hit a two-bagger.

In the third, Dusty Cooke doubled, and was promptly brought across the plate by Heinie Manush's two-bagger to right.

Except for those two innings, Phillips pitched hitless ball.

The victory stretched the Red Sox' second place margin over the Tigers to four full games, and pulled Boston up to 2½ games back of the league-leading Yanks, who were rained out.

Pilots Say Louis To Fight Braddock

Garden Official Promised Bout to Light-Heavy.

Pittsburgh, June 10 (AP).—Gus Greenlee, manager of John Henry Lewis, light heavyweight boxing champion, said tonight his Negro scrapper has been promised a bout with James J. Braddock, heavyweight champion.

Greenlee said:

"I have been assured by Jimmy Johnston, of Madison Square Garden, that John Henry Lewis will be named by the Garden authorities as the man who will fight James J. Braddock for the heavyweight title next September."

He added he will post a forfeit next Wednesday for Lewis' appearance against Braddock.

Mungo, Brooklyn Pitching Ace, Quits Team, Leaves for Home

By the Associated Press.

Pittsburgh, June 10.—Van Lingle Mungo, star speedball pitcher of the Brooklyn Dodgers, quit the team today and left for New York as the Dodgers finished their series with the Pirates and moved on to Cincinnati.

Mungo gave no reason for his action, but it has been an open secret that the big right-hander has been dissatisfied with the support of his teammates and disappointed at the fatilure of recent negotiations to trade him.

John Gorman, business manager of the club, said no action would be taken against the pitcher, at least until the club gets to Cincinnati tomorrow. It seemed inevitable, however, that he will be fined or suspended or both.

Gorman said he went to Mungo's room this morning and tried to persuade Van to change his mind about leaving, but found the pticher sullen and unwilling to reconsider.

Mungo did not report at the clubhouse in Forbes Field. He told Gorman that any official of the club could see him at his hotel in Brooklyn tomorrow, and then left for the Pittsburgh railroad station.

Mungo has been sought by practically every club in the league for the past few seasons. Considered by many the fastest pitcher in the game today, Mungo most recently was mentioned in a deal with the Giants in which he was to be traded for Pitcher Clydell Castleman and Outfielder Hank Leiber. Travis' Home Run Saves Shut Out

Blaeholder Yields But Six Safeties; Tribe Gets 5 Runs in 1st.

Hale, Trosky Also Get Circuit Blows; 4 Nats Hit Safely.

By Shirley Povich.
Sports Editor of The Post.

Washington's one-game winning streak met a violent end yesterday when a last-ditch, ninth-inning rally featured by Cecil Travis, home-run smash over the rightfield wall fell short of tying the score—8 runs short.

At the moment of Travis' clout, with Buddy Lewis on base, the Cleveland Indians were enjoying the comforts of a 10-to-0 lead. Thus Travis' wallop served only to cheat big George Blaeholder out of a shut-out triumph.

Blaeholder was within one put-out of his shut-out ambitions with only Travis blocking his path. The big right-hander, who was not deemed good enough for either the seventh-place Athletics or the eighth-place Browns within the past season, was some shucks as a pitcher out there yesterday. Six hits was his allotment to the Nats.

Half of their 10 runs the Indians accumulated against Earl Whitehill in the first inning. By the time the Nats' veteran southpaw had finished pitching home runs to the Injuns they had a 5 to 0 lead. Before Whitehill was withdrawn at the end of the eighth, the Injuns had boosted it to 8 to 0. Their last two runs were pitched to 'em by Fred Marberry in the ninth.

Only four of the Nats were able to solve the delivery of Blaeholder. Buddy Lewis rapped out a double and a single and Travis added a single to his homer. A triple by Cliff Bolton and a single by Joe Kuhel were the only other blows surrendered by the Injuns' right-hander.

That first inning began in a very deceiving manner when Roy Hughes opened the game with a safe bunt

Charles Town, W. Va., June 10.—Blonde Baggage, a chestnut mare shipped here from Ohio last week, made here first start at this track and bounced off with the Station WFMD purse, the feature race of the day. Assigned Sammy Palumbo, the leading rider, the daughter of Bagenbaggage, one time Kentucky Derby hope, came through to a length victory over Royal Veil. Another half length away, came Famous Clayton to take third money in the field of seven competing over the Charles Town course.

Blonde Baggage was of unknown quality among those who send the green paper into the mutuel machines and the chosen few who bought the No. 2 pasteboards were those who cashed a $22.20 mutuel.

Palumbo put up one of his usual good rides to win. He rated his mount off the pace of Royal Veil until entering the stretch, where he turned her loose and came up on the rail to take the decision.

The race, in honor of the radio station at Frederick, Md., was run over a good track and under bright skies.

The daily double, which has been paying off in freight car numbers, returned a mere $10.20 today when Barn Stormer and Flying Dervish won the two sections.

Good Gracious Pays $16.

Good Gracious bounced out of No. 1 gate at the break and made every post a winning one in the first race. Jockey A. Tryon hustled the filly along for a $16.80 pay off. Miss Nobby, a long shot, was a well-beaten second with Loch London a disappointing third.

Barnstormer gave the favorite players a break in the second race by taking a two-length decision from Lady Buck. The firm of Feltner, Feltner and Feltner controlled the winner, which came up on the inside to take command. Barnstormer came through with a $5 price tag attached.

The firm of Bond, Bond and Bond added another purse to its long list in the third race. Flying Dervish was the medium of the victory, which brought a $3.20 pay-off. Wrackess and Runanstay were the others in the money in the test over the Charles Town course.

Passing Sun came from behind to win the fourth race from a vest pocket field of five. Johnny Shanks gave the winner an intelligent ride. He was blocked by Tell It and Peggy Can at the far turn, but wisely stayed in on the rail to come through entering the stretch. Peggy Can was second and Tell It third.

Sea Finn and Miss Tiptoe put up a thrilling stretch duel in the fifth race, named the Washington Star Purse. Sea Finn took the decision and her backers collected $9.80.

WALTZ KING	(Myers)	113	7	3	7°	7h	7°	5.20
MONT DAISY	(Root)	103	4	6	4h	8	8	51.90

Two-dollar mutuels paid—GOOD GRACIOUS, $16.80, $9.40, $4.80; MISS NOBBY, $21.40, $7.80; LOCH LONDON, $3.40.

GOOD GRACIOUS sprinted into the lead along the rail in the opening furlong, shook off early challenges of LOCH LONDON and then drew clear to win handily. MISS NOBBY, prominent from the beginning, finished willingly, though no match for the winner. LOCH LONDON broke poorly, was rushed into contention and weakened slightly in the stretch. AMASIN showed a good effort after dropping back at the start. CEDARBROOK, shuffled to last at the break, came through on the rail entering the stretch and then faltered. Appears ready to score. MONT DAISY had early speed.

SECOND RACE—About 4½ furlongs. Purse, $300; claiming. For 3-year-olds and upward. Start good from stall gates. Won driving; place same. Went to post at 3:11. Off at 3:14½. Winner, Claud Feltner's ch. f. (4), by Strolling Player—Star Gaze. Trained by C. M. Feltner. Value to winner, $220; second, $50; third, $20; fourth, $10. Time, 0:52 2-5.

Two-dollar mutuels paid—BARNSTORMER, $5.00, $3.60, $2.80; LADY BUCK, $4.40, $2.80; BIG DIPPER, $3.20.

BARNSTORMER shook off POLLY PLUM rounding the turn for the stretch and easily held LADY BUCK safe in the final stages. LADY BUCK could not find room to get through going to the far turn and came with good courage when clear. BIG DIPPER, outrun to the stretch, closed willingly. THISTLE FLIT, away forwardly, was pinched back at the far turn and failed to rally thereafter. POLLY PLUM quit after running with BARNSTORMER. OUR ROSE and WHITE CLOUD were outrun.

THIRD RACE—Charles Town course. Purse, $300; claiming. For maidens and winners of one race, 3-year-olds and upward. Start good from stall gates. Won driving; place same. Went to post at 3:39. Off at 3:42. Winner, Mrs. J. B. Bond's br. c. (3), by Flying Ebony—Beiphrizonia. Trained by J. B. Bond. Value to winner, $220; second, $50; third, $20; fourth, $10. Time, 1:22 2-5.

Two-dollar mutuels paid—FLYING DERVISH, $3.20, $2.60, $2.20; WRACKESS, $3.20, $2.60; RUNANSTAY, $3.20.

FLYING DERVISH, rushed into contention on the outside going to the first turn, was rated along close to the pace of THEIR FIRST, rallied when put to drive and held WRACKESS safely at striking distance of the leaders, came around on the outside entering the stretch, but hung in the final sixteenth. RUNANSTAY, taken under restraint to the stretch turn, closed willingly and showed a good effort. WHAT CHEER closed some ground in the late stages. THEIR FIRST quit after setting the pace. DONPA had early speed.

DAILY DOUBLE PAID $10.20.

FOURTH RACE—Six and one-half furlongs. Purse, $400; claiming. For 3-year-olds and upward. Start good from stall gates. Won driving; place same. Went to post at 4:10. Off at 4:10½. Winner, Col. A. E. Pierce's b. g. (4), by Wrack—Morning Sunshine. Trained by G. Russell. Value to winner, $300; second, $60; third, $30; fourth, $10. Time, 1:23 2-5.

Two-dollar mutuels paid—PASSING SUN, $9.40, $4.40, $2.20; PEGGY CAN, $4.20, $2.20; TELL IT, $2.20.

PASSING SUN, allowed to settled into stride, went into contention with a bold rush going into the far turn, was taken along the rail when blocked, came through on the inside at the stretch turn, and wore down PEGGY CAN in the last sixteenth, under energetic handling. TELL IT joined PEGGY CAN midway of the backstretch, went slightly wide entering the straightaway and faltered slightly at the end. DR. JILLSON quit after being troubled going into the backstrtch. LOOK FORWARD had high early speed and retired.

WEATHER, CLEAR. TRACK, GOOD.

FIFTH RACE—About 7 furlongs. Purse, $300; claiming. The Washington Star. For 3-year-olds and upward. Start good from stall gates. Won driving; place same. Went to post at 4:35. Off at 4:35½. Winner, Mrs. L. Seay s b. f. (3), by Sea Rip—Daisy Finnegan. Trained by M. Johnson. Value to winner, $220; second, $50; third, $20; fourth, $10. Time, 1:29 4-5.

Horses	Jockeys	Wgt.	Post	St.	¼	½	Str.	Fin.	Straight

Two-dollar mutuels paid—SEA FINN, $9.80, $5.40, $3.60; MISS TIPTOE, $3.40, $3.00; HUPPY, $7.40.

SEA FINN, closest to the pace of MISS TIPTOE from the start, came to the outside of the pacemaker entering the stretch and under vigorous handling, was up in the concluding strides. MISS TIPTOE assumed command at the first turn through hustling but weakened in the final eighth. RED LABEL, was pinched back at the first turn and was dully ridden thereafter. MARGE and GNOMNIE were outrun.

SIXTH RACE—Charles Town course. Purse, $300; claiming. For 3-year-olds and upward. Start good from stall gates. Won driving; place same. Went to post at 5:04½. Winner, Mrs. J. S. Corey's ch. m. (5), by Basenbaggage—Speckled Beauty. Trained by L. Partington. Value to winner, $220; second, $50; third, $20; fourth, $10. Time, 1:20 3-5.

Two-dollar mutuels paid—BLONDE BAGGAGE, $22.20, $7.00, $3.60; ROYAL VEIL, $4.40, $3.20; FAMOUS CLAYTON, $3.20.

BLONDE BAGGAGE, rated along off the pace of ROYAL VEIL, rallied when put to a drive and disposed of the pace setter in the final sixteenth under excellent handling. ROYAL VEIL was rushed to take command and weakened in the final drive. FAMOUS CLAYTON entered contention swinging for the stretch and closed full of run. MISS FERN lacked early speed, moved up menacingly entering the stretch, but faltered. MISS PATCHES dropped back after a half.

WEATHER, CLEAR. TRACK, FAST.

SEVENTH RACE—One and one-sixteenth miles. Purse, $300; claiming. The Baltimore. For 4-year-olds and upward. Start good from stall gates. Won driving; place same. Went to post at 5:32½. Off at 5:34. Winner, N. d'Orsaneo's b. g. (4), by Saxon—Lady Scattercash II. Trained by R. C. Utz. Value to winner, $220; second, $50; third, $20; fourth, $10. Time, 1:52 1-5.

Two-dollar mutuels paid—WITTEKIND, $4.80, $3.60, $3.40; PRINCE PETTIE, $6.00, $4.80; McDONALD H., $4.20.

WITTEKIND, much the best, was sent to the front at once and taken under steadying restraint to easily hold PRINCE PETTIE safe in the late stages. PRINCE PETTIE, well ridden, moved up behind the pace setter going to the far turn and continued gamely. McDONALD H. went evenly, but could not menace. KESWICK closed some ground. FOREST FAUN was ridden wide at every turn and can do better.

EIGHTH RACE—One and one-sixteenth miles. Purse, $300; claiming. The Blue Ridge. For 3-year-olds and upward. Start good from stall gates. Won driving; place same. Went to post at 6:06½. Off at 6:09. SINGLE KAY	(Sargent)	112½	7	5	7½	8	Pulled up			30.30

Two-dollar mutuels paid—COVENTRY QUEEN, $8.80, $5.00, $4.20; STAR SPECIAL, $7.00, $4.00; BROWN WREN, $3.00.

COVENTRY QUEEN, under restraint while setting the pace, had to be ridden out to stave off closing rush of STAR SPECIAL. The latter pressed the pace all the way and was wearing the winner down at the end. BROWN WREN, within striking distance from the start, had no excuses. BAV showed a good effort, but weakened in the last furlong. THIS PLAY went forwardly, but could not threaten. COAT TAILS saved ground all the way. SINGLE KAY was pulled up on the backstretch.

Time Out!

Lucky for the Olympic team it was the pole vaulter who was late for the boat.

Mrs. Meckley's 77 Lowers Own Mark to Lead in Maryland Golf

3 Other D. C. Entries Also Triumph

Mrs. Scott, Mrs. Walper, Helen Dettweiler Win in First Round.

By Dave Herman,
A Staff Correspondent.

Baltimore, Md., Suburban Country Club, Pikesville, Md., June 10.—Not content with her record-breaking 79 in yesterday's medal round, Mrs. Betty Meckley, of Indian Spring Club, defending titleholder, lowered her own mark, unofficially, today in the first round of the Maryland State women's championship here today. Hitting her shots in great style, even better than yesterday, Mrs. Meckley scored a 77 even par, while defeating Mrs. C. C. Barr, of Rodgers Ford, 7 and 6.

Mrs. Meckley turned in 39 to stand four up, with a course record in sight she played out, missing a short putt on the eighteenth for a 76.

Another Washington golfer, Mrs. Jack Scott, of Kenwood, runner-up to Mrs. Meckley last season, played brilliant golf in turning back the seven-time former champion, Mrs. E. Boyd Morrow, of Elkridge, 2 and 1, in the most thrilling match of the day.

Mrs. Scott, out in 38, one under par, played the back side in 40, barely missing a 10 footer on the home green, that would have given her a 77.

The Kenwood golfer was two up on Mrs. Morrow at the turn, and clinched the match with a fine three on the seventeenth.

Two other Washington golfers survived the firing. They were Helen Dettweiler, of Congressional, 1934 champion, and Mrs. Leo Walper, of Kenwood.

Mrs. L. G. Pray, of Manor, was eliminated by Mrs. Jerome Sloman, favorite from the host club, 5 and 7.

Miss Dettweiler, starting with a nine after hitting two shots out of bounds, won as she pleased, 6 and 4, from Miss Janette Meyers, of Suburban.

Mrs. Walper was two under par in trimming Mrs. E. B. Mower, of Elkridge, 7 and 6, being four up going to the tenth.

In tomorrow's second-round matches, Mrs. Meckley meets up with Miss Dettweiler, whom she defeated last Friday in the District finals.

The luck of draw is such that Mrs. Walper will face Mrs. Scott.

In the third flight, Mrs. J. T. Powell, of Manor, defeated Mrs. W. T. Sheridan, of Hillendale, 1 up, and Mrs. G. F. Goetzman, of Congressional, lost to Mrs. Sol Hoffberger, of Woodbine, 8 and 6.

Indians Beat Nats, 10-2; Whitehill Hit

That was the last of the Injuns' puny efforts for the inning. After Averill walked with one out, the Injuns attacked Whitehill with great vigor.

Joe Vosmik crashed a double off the leftfield wall that scored Hughes and Averill, and Sammy Hale banged a home run into the left field seats that scored Vosmik ahead of himself. Just to be different, Hal Trosky, the next batter, batted a home run over the rightfield wall, to make it 5 to 0.

The Nats were never in the ball game. Kuhel's single with two out was wasted in the second inning. Buddy Lewis could get no further than third after he filed off the fourth with a double, and Bolton's triple, with two out in the fifth, was useless. Travis' futile single was the only other hit allowed by Blaeholder in the first eight innings.

The Injuns made it 6-0 in the sixth when Trosky tripled to right and scored on Knickerbocker's infield hit, and they made it 7-0 in the eighth when Hale led off with a double and scored on Lewis' wild throw on Gleeson's single down the third base line. It was 8-0 in the eighth after Hale led off with a double.

Carl Reynolds presented the Injuns with their pair of runs in the ninth when with Hughes on base, he let Gleeson's single roll through his legs for a three-base error and both runners scored.

'Big Run' of Blues In Bay Is Reported

Chesapeake Bay's first big run of bluefish was reported yesterday at Southwest Middles. So plentiful were the blues that even buck net fishermen were hauling them in.

Fishing with Capt. Bob Drury, Ronald Franklin and Bob Smith, of Washington, reported a catch of 39 blues averaging scaling 7 and 9 pounds. A party in the boat of Capt. Brady McKay landed 33 blues averaging 7 pounds and one channel bass of 35 pounds. The fish were caught both chumming and trolling.

Newsom to Oppose White Sox Today

The one team on which the Washington club has been unable to beat this season, the Chicago White Sox, moves into Griffith Stadium today for a three-game series with the Nats.

To Buck Newsom, who pitched only three innings in his previous starts for obvious reasons, chief of which were a flock of Detroit runs, has been assigned the task of checking the White Sox today.

In three clashes with the Chicago club this season, the Nats have taken three beatings.

Mrs. Robinson Wins in City Net Play

Seeded Stars Score as Survivors Reach Quarter-finals.

The City of Washington women's tennis championships whittled itself to quarter-final proportions yesterday with all the seeded stars still very much in the running. Mrs. Stanley Robinson experienced great difficulty, however, to dispose of Mrs. Dorette Miller, 6—2, 5—7 6—3.

Sara Moore and Dorette Miller, the top-seeded doubles team, many times were on the verge of elimination but through superior experience finally managed to outlast the youthful combination of Marian Pritchard and Audrey Winston in three hard sets.

Playing in her third three-setter of the day, Mrs. Miller, paired with the veteran Hugh Trigg, bowed to Edith Clarke and Bud Markey, 5—7, 6—2, 6—4, in the first round of the mixed doubles division.

In today's most promising match Edith Clarke, first-seeded player, will cross racquets with Dorothey Anderson, former Penn State star, in a quarter-final battle scheduled for 2 o'clock.

YESTERDAY'S RESULTS.
Singles.
Margaret Robinson defeated Dorette Miller, 6—2, 5—7, 6—3; Mary Ryan defeated Edith McCulloch, 6—2, 6—2; Bobsey Turney defeated Dorothy Berzstorm, 6—3, 6—3.

Important Matches in Sight For Gallagher After Victory

By Bill McCormick.

Marty Gallagher looked up from a platter of ice cream with which he was breaking training and avowed as how he would rest for about 30 days, then enter into one of the most active summers he ever has known.

"I want a few weeks to eat ice cream," confessed the wee broth of a lad from Foggy Bottom, who soundly trounced Alexandria's Bob Tow in a hectic battle at Griffith Stadium last Tuesday night. "Then a couple of weeks to train—then bring on any and all heavyweights.

Marty knows nothing of the rumors being wafted about to the effect that he may be selected as a summer opponent for Joe Louis.

"I'd love it," he insists. "I've always had an idea I could give Joe a better fight than most of those guys. Anyway, I wouldn't be licked before I got in the ring because I'm not afraid of Joe Louis or any other man."

It has been said that those who pull the strings on Louis wish to book the Brown Bomber with some really rough, tough and courageous heavyweight and that they are watching the big-time comeback of Gallagher with a careful eye.

Among other possibilities for Gallagher in the near future are bouts with Jack Dempsey's white hope, Red Burman, who may meet the Georgetown heavyweight here; a possible return bout with King Levinsky, with whom Gallagher staged a rousing joust last summer, and a return match with Tow.

Al Delaney, a favorite here last winter, also is mentioned as a possible Griffith Stadium opponent for Gallagher, as are Buck Everett, District heavyweight champion, and Billy Nichy, of Pittsburgh.

Mentally hurt, but practically unharmed physically by his defeat at the hands of Gallagher, Tow is preparing to depart for Dallas, Tex., where he will engage in a return match with Tom Beaupre. Tow scored a fifth-round technical knockout over Beaupre in a bout in Chicago last winter and the handlers of the Texas Terror have been attempting to arrange a rematch since then.

Tow is unmarked by the bout, but his nose, which was considerably punched around by Marty, still is very sore. He does not expect that to be any handicap against Beaupre, whom he is scheduled to box June 18. Tow and his handlers will leave for Texas tomorrow.

Lopez to Meet Sonnenberg Tonight

By George Considine.

Virile Vincent Lopez, hailed by Californians and a few others as the world wrestling champion, will play a return engagement tonight at the ball park. This time the mountainous Mexican mat-dor is to be aided and abetted by none other than Dynamite Gus Sonnenberg, the old flying tackler.

If rassle records are to be taken seriously, the match should be one of the best exhibitions since the Londos-Dusek brawls. The Lopez has had his ham-like fist raised at the end of his last 150 performances while Sonnenberg has tasted defeat, so-called, only once locally in more than eight years.

Dynamite Gus, a former world champion, is in the midst of a comeback, it seems. Since his illness, the old dynamiter has simply refused to lose. Only last week he disposed of Ernie Dusek and Chief Little Wolf on successive nights.

When you come right down to it, there's a bit of drama wrapped up in that Lopez-Sonnenberg matravesty. It seems that Strangler Lewis has appointed himself Lopez's manager. It also seems that Sonnenberg got into the big dough several years by trimming the old Strangler and Gus and the Strangler haven't spoken to each other since then.

Beaten by a younger man, the old master searches tirelessly until he has found a "champion." Then having found his "champion," he grooms and develops him until he is ready to do combat with the old master's conqueror. Tonight is the Strangler's night of revenge—or failure. Old-fashioned mellerdrammer.

Semifinally, Kansas City Joe Cox, who has a steadier job than a lifer, will return again to grapple and growl with Desperate Dick Powell, while the prelims offer Little Ralph Garibaldi and Cliff Olsen, Sailor Billings and Hank Barber, and Charley Strack and Izzy Goldstein.

Battalino, Ex-Feather Champ, Will Fight Cowboy Scott Here

Christopher (Bat) Battalino, one of the greatest club fighters the ring ever has known, will make his first appearance in Washington at Griffith Stadium next Monday night. The Battler's opponent will be Cowboy Howard Scott, a youngster, who has been eminently successful of late, and the scheduled distance will be ten rounds.

Battalino retired undefeated as featherweight champion of the world in 1932 because of inability to make the weight. Bat took a small fortune with him when he nailed his mauling mittens to the wall.

Fortune and all, Battalino soon again felt the lure of the resin dust and he returned to the wars simply because he lives to fight and does not fight to live.

In his first severe test after returning to the squared circle, Battalino dropped a very unpopular decisoin to Al Roth, high-ranking lightweight contender. Among those he defeated in his heyday were Al Singer, Andre Routis, Lew Massey, Bud Taylor, Eddie Shea, Freddie Miller, Eddie Ran, Jackie Davis, Lew Feldman, Cocoa Kid and Kid Chocolate.

British Favored In Wightman Cup Play

By the Associated Press.

London, June 10.—Battle lines for the fourteenth Wightman Cup international tennis series between American and British women stars were drawn today and immediately experts decided Britain's chances for ending America's five-year supremacy were unusually bright.

The best four-matches-out-of-seven series will start Friday with Helen Jacobs, four-time American champion, opposing Kay Stammers, left-handed British star; Mrs. Sarah Palfrey Fabyan, of Brookline, Mass., meeting Dorothy Round, former Wimbledon titlist, and Mrs. John Van Ryn, of Philadelphia, and Carolyn Babock, of Los Angeles, teaming up in the doubles against Nancy Lyle and Evelyn Dearman.

Saturday's concluding schedule: Mrs. Fabyan vs. Miss Stammers, Miss Jacobs vs. Miss Round, Miss Babcock vs. Ruth Mary Hardwick, and Miss Jacobs and Mrs. Fabyan vs. Miss Stammers and Freda James.

Dan Maskell, prominent professional at Wimbledon, where the annual series will be played, picked the English team to win by the score of 4 to 3, while one of England's biggest bookmakers offered 5 to 4 against the Americans.

The fact that Miss Stammers defeated Miss Jacobs in three sets on foreign soil last year and this time will be playing on home ground was regarded as the basis for his prediction. Miss Jacobs and Miss Round, who appears to be emerging from an early season slump, have met four times in past cup clashes, with the American champion winning every time.

Pepco Triumphs, 5 to 4, Over Center Market

Although outhit, 11 to 7, Potomac Power Co. upset Center Market, 5 to 4, yesterday on the East Ellipse in the National Capital League of The Washington Post Sandlot Association.

Pitcher Joe Sullivan won his own ball game in the last half of the ninth, when, with the score tied, he tripled to center to score Roach with the deciding run. Tonker, of the losers, hit a home run in the sixth inning.

This Morning . . .

With Shirley Povich.

There's a character on the Washington Ball Club, who, in this piece, shall remain nameless for the simple reason that some folks are always eager to believe the worst; but he's a victim of what has been a vicious whispering campaign and it's high time that due note be taken of baseball's grapevine canards, which apparently have been a part of the game ever since Abner Doubleday committed the first diamond.

POVICH.

They have a way in baseball of tabbing certain guys as yellow—admittedly good ball players who are supposed to have the fighting heart of saffron curs, and you'd be surprised how that kind of news gets around the league once that kind of an opinion is uttered.

Wherever baseball players gather, in the clubhouse, on trains, or in card games, perhaps, mention of a certain ball player is sure-fire to incite sneers of high contempt all around. Never for a moment do they doubt that they may have the guy wrong—that stories of his faint-heartedness are scurrilous falsehoods. Why, everybody in the league knows he's yellow. It must be so.

And pity the poor guy who is thus branded, because that kind of reputation has an unfortunate habit of enduring among ball players long after he has proved the contrary to the satisfaction of all who were not in the know.

A manager's dislike for a certain ball player, an unfortunate but perhaps innocent incident on the field, or perhaps some deliberate whispering campaign is enough to give a guy a reputation of possessing no competitive heart. Sometimes it requires even less than that. The merest suspicion that a guy is yellow is enough to start a vicious, league-wide rumor to that effect.

Baseball men will tell you that even the big-shot stars do not escape the brand of yellow. The great Hans Wagner labored for many seasons under the suspicion of both teammates and rival clubs that he was lacking in physical courage. That belief was widespread until Wagner finally laid its ghost with the greatest shortstop performances in the annals of baseball.

Who'd a-thought that Sam Jones, who labored for 9 years in the big leagues, once fell under the suspicion that a faint ticker beat within his breast? But for years it was supposed to be common knowledge that Sad Sam had a lot of quit in him. A new generation of players came along to admire him for his pitching heart, while the old generation came to realize the falsity and evil of the beliefs in which they had been holding a fellow who stayed to become one of the grand old men of the mound.

Pitchers, particularly, are vulnerable to the suspicions of rival clubs. Let a hurler lose a series of close games, or fold up in even one important battle and he risks the chance of being tabbed as a heartless quitter. There are such beliefs in baseball as a pitcher being a great front runner with no native courage when the score is tied. And plenty of baseball men will still point to pitchers who have great records with losing teams yet can't win with winning clubs when they are expected to win.

They will point to 'em and with a knowing nod infer that the guy lacks guts; that they wouldn't have him on their ball club at any price; that he chokes up when the chips are down, and that it won't be long before they'll run him out of the league.

As I was saying up ahead, Washington has on its staff a pitcher who long has been under suspicion. Rival managers laughed out loud when the Nats had the temerity to buy him. It was noised about the league for years that the guy lacked a fighting heart. Admittedly, he had plenty of stuff on the ball, but nobody wanted that kind of a fellow on their ball teams. Mention of his name was enough to cause ball players to hold their thumbs and forefingers to their noses and screw up their faces in significant disgust.

Even Manager Bucky Harris was aware of the fellow's reputation and was on watch for the first sign of it ringing true. He's still waiting, because the fellow has done everything but quit out there on the mound, including some of the best-pitched ball games it has been the Nats' good fortune to win.

But baseball at large will never believe that the guy is not a quitter. Stories of that kind are too easily accepted by the ball players as gospel. They are willing, nay eager, to believe 'em. A guy with the reputation of a quitter comes into the big leagues prejudged, which, I would say, is a heluva note and no compliment to the game.

Winter Wheat Crop Forecast Higher June 1

482 Million Bushels Compares With 463.7 Million on May 1.

The Department of Agriculture announced yesterday that a winter wheat crop of 482,000,000 bushels this year was indicated from conditions June 1.

A crop of 463,708,000 bushels was indicated a month ago, and 433,447,000 bushels were produced last year. The 1928-32 average production was 618,186,000 bushels.

Rye production is indicated as 33,400,000 bushels, compared with 35,253,000 a month ago, 57,936,000 last year, and 38,655,000 bushels, the 1928-32 average.

A peach crop of 40,600,000 bushels is indicated, compared with 52,800,000 last year and 56,500,000, the 1928-32 average.

Pear production is indicated as 22,500,000 bushels, compared with 21,300,000 last year and 23,100,000, the 1928-32 average.

The condition of winter wheat on June 1 was 66.7 per cent of a normal, compared with 67.0 a month ago, 74.2 a year ago, and 73.9, the 1923-32 average. Rye condition was 63.2 per cent of a normal, compared with 74.3 a month ago, 84.2 a year ago, and 79.6, the 1923-32 average.

Cotton Consumption Makes New Record

By the Associated Press.

With cotton consumption establishing a new high record, the Agricultural Economics Bureau yesterday estimated the world carry-over August 1 would be about 12,500,000 bales, compared with 13,624,000 a year ago. The 1923-32 average was about 10,155,000 bales.

American cotton carry-over was estimated at 7,300,000 bales, compared with 9,000,000 a year ago and a ten-year average of 6,000,000. Most of the world consumption increase this season, the bureau said, has been in manufacture of American cotton.

$83,000,000 Land Bank 3s Offered Today

Refunding Bonds Are Priced at 100¼% and Interest.

Formal offering is being made today of an issue of $83,000,000 Federal Land Banks 3 per cent consolidated Federal farm loan bonds, due January 1, 1956, and not redeemable before January 1, 1946. The bonds are priced at 100¼ per cent and interest, to yield about 2.97 per cent. The offering is being made under the direction of Charles R. Dunn, fiscal agent for the land banks, and with the co-operation of a banking group comprising Alex. Brown and Sons, the Chase National Bank, Brown Harriman & Co., Inc., Guaranty Trust Co. of New York, the National City Bank of New York, Edward B. Smith & Co., the First Boston Corporation, Lee Higginson Corporation and a Nation-wide selling group.

Proceeds from the sale of the bonds, together with cash on hand, will be used to retire approximately $83,125,020 principal amount of 4¼ per cent bonds of the individual Federal Land Banks which have been called for payment July 1. Although the bonds are not Government obligations, and are not guaranteed by the Government, they are the secured obligations of banks operating under Federal charter with governmental supervision by the Farm Credit Administration. The Supreme Court of the United States has upheld the constitutionality of the act creating the banks and the provision exempting their obligations from Federal, State, municipal and local taxation. The exemptions include exemptions from surtaxes on the income from the bonds. The transfer of the bonds, by inheritance, gift, etc., is, of course, subject to taxation under any applicable valid laws providing for the taxation of transfers of personal property.

The consolidated bonds are the joint obligation of the 12 Federal Land Banks. Holders of the 4¼ per cent bonds which have been called for redemption will receive, so far as practicable, preferential treatment.

Tobacco Markets.

Special Dispatch to The Post.

Baltimore, Md., June 10.—Maryland—The figures this week are receipts, 600 hogsheads; sales, 1,791 hogsheads. The actual new offerings this week were about 1,500 hogsheads, and most of which were sold, but the sales included some 500 hogsheads of old crop. Prices for new crop were higher than before excepting for the best grade, which remained at 40 cents.

The Market

By Carlton A. Shively, A Special Correspondent.

Stocks Maintain Small Gains in Faster Trading Pace; Francs at Gold Point.

New York, June 10.—Stocks kept up the good work of the week by moving higher in moderately active trading. If the market reflects at all the personal feelings of the financial district, the steam of its present recovery is coming from reviving hopes of a political victory over the New Deal. Those hopes stem from Cleveland. Turnover was above a million shares, the first time in two weeks. High-grade bonds were dull. September wheat was unchanged at 85¼ cents a bushel.

Market interest continued, or even increased, in the Republican convention. Hope of a better era for business, raised yesterday in part by the intimation that the platform would contain a sound plank on the currency—for generations the distinguishing feature between the Republican and the Democratic parties—was slightly diluted today by signs of a compromising attitude on the part of the Landon general staff with the Borah forces.

Borah, with his farm board affair, it is well recognized in the financial district, was one of the evil geniuses of the Hoover regime and his ideas, leaning toward the New Deal, easily could prove to be a blight that will destroy the party's chances this autumn. Unfortunately, some of those on the Landon side, long noted for their instability and superficiality in economics, seem to be inclined to compromise with the man from Idaho. Every kind of economic claptrap and poppycock inevitably goes with an unsound monetary policy and Wall Street is convinced that little hope for the Republicans can be held if the Borah influence makes itself felt to any extent in the platform.

Wish Sound Policies.

While the keynote speech was fairly well liked in the downtown section, it was rightly regarded as nothing more than a speech, designed to encourage, but outlining no particular principles that a candidate must accept or follow. Landon will be acceptable enough to business men and to those who know that their own economic security lies in prosperous business, but his election will be a probability, in the opinion of Wall Street, only provided the platform is drawn in sturdy opposition to the New Deal.

Business news was uniformly good. The Steel Corporation reported an increase in shipments for May, compared with the previous month and with the same period of last year. Electric current output continued to climb and railroad freight car loadings gathered momentum. The total loadings now are the highest since the heavy movement of last autumn.

Francs Steady.

In the foreign exchange market francs were steady at the gold point, supported by London and sterling was firm. While the French program for a new deal plainly ponts to depreciation of the currency, the logical minds of the French themselves seem to be grasping the realties of the situation. The result may be a considerable revision in the inflamatory program, even if in the meantime the franc is forced to leave gold. Temporary abandonment of the gold standard is one thing and an avowed policy of high pressure inflation, high living costs and high production costs is another.

Prices for stocks were better from the beginning, but the market showed less zest for the rise in the late trading, athough little objection to the advance was raised at any time. Improvement in prices was general, being most noticeable among the motor and utility shares, partly because of their recent lethargy. The oil market also was more active and harder.

Utilities Rise.

Turnover in some of the utility shares was large at the start, running from 1,000 to 3,000 shares in the lower priced issues, such as Electric Power, Water Works and Consolidated Edson. United Corporation was especially active. Telephone sold above 170, and then yielded to profit taking.

Steel held around its previous closing price and most of the group were firm. Chemicals were mixed. arm implement and mail-order shares continued to give comfort to the speculative element. Montgomery Ward reached its best price of the year before running into profit taking. Sears sold at a new high level. Case jumped 3 points.

Gold shares weakened and Cerro de Pasco in the copper-silver group moved against the trend in that section by losing a point, following a long rise. Coppers were narrow. Better prices were the rule for the rail equipments, motor accessories, merchants, tobaccos and foods. Industrial Alcohol sank 2 points into new low ground. Madison Square Garden broke more than 2 points on a few sales. Gimbel common and preferred went up to new high prices. Ward Baking issues made sharp gains.

Francs.

The address made by the new governor of the Bank of France before that institution's board of regents created a mildly improved tone in the franc market, noticeable chiefly in a narrower spread between spot and future francs, but the new governor of the bank did little more than to say that future policies rested entirely upon the government. There were also manifestations that the Radical Socialist Party was beginning to realize what might happen to French production costs and the French share of world trade if the 40-hour week promised by Mr. Blum were adopted. Spot francs remained at the gold point, and it was expected that some further small imports of metal from Paris would be announced later. The British equalization fund continued intermittent buying of francs.

Railroad Outlook.

Railroad freight traffic reports for last week continued to show substantial gains. The indicated national total is higher than in any week since October 26, 1935, when loadings were starting down from the year's peak. At the present rate, the seasonal high this fall will cross 800,000 cars. The cumulative total to date is 8.5 per cent ahead of the same period in 1935. Optimism is at such a level that the North Western board is about to issue another plan for reorganization and the Rock Island plan is expected within a few weeks. The most important item in suspense, the test of the railway pension laws, is nearing determination by the District of Columbia Supreme Court.

B. & O. Travel Up 44 Per Cent With Low Fare

Revenue Gain on New Rates Is Estimated at 28 to 30 Per Cent.

By the Associated Press.

New York, June 10.—Silence pervaded all but one of the major Eastern railroad offices today on the question of whether lower fares, ordered into effect ten days ago by the Interstates Commerce Commission, had resulted in an increase or a decrease of passenger revenues.

The exception was the Baltimore & Ohio, which reported a rise of nearly 44 per cent in the number of passengers carried in the New York district and a revenue gain of 28 to 30 per cent.

The B. & O. was the only major line not to contest the rate cut order. Twenty-three other railroads, including the New York Central, Pennsylvania, New York, Chicago & St. Louis and Chesapeake & Ohio, have joined in a suit to restrain the commission from enforcing its order.

W. B. Calloway, general passenger traffic manager of the B. & O., expressed a belief, however, that "many people who have not used the railroad regularly for travel during the last few years have started rail travel again," especially in short distance travel.

A spokesman for the New York Central, asserting it would be several months before a trend could be discerned, said:

Bank Auditors To Elect Council

The final meeting of the year for the auditors' section of the District Bankers Association will be held tonight at Pheasant Farms Inn, near Colesville, Md. The meeting will be preceded by a dinner.

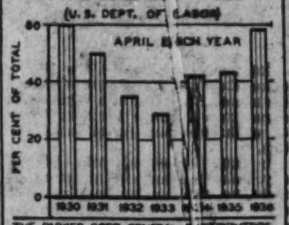
Following the dinner, a special business session will be held to choose the members who will comprise the new executive council. James D. Barrett, retiring chairman, will preside. The nominating committee, headed by Albert E. Yeatman, assistant cashier of the Columbia National Bank, has placed before the section the names of the following members: James D. Barrett, American Security & Trust Co.; F. V. A. Cook, National Metropolitan Bank; T. P. Cowgill, Riggs National Bank; Harry L. Downey, Washington Loan & Trust Co.; H. Norman Glasco, Union Trust Co.; Gerald E. Keene, Second National Bank; William B. Mehler, jr., City Bank; Lewis B. Thomas, Liberty National Bank; Will R. Swetman, Bank of Commerce & Savings, and M. S. Yeatman, Hamilton National Bank.

Karl W. Corby, newly elected president of the District of Columbia Bankers Association, and Albert S. Gatley, treasurer, will be special guests representing the association.

C. F. Wilson Director Of Fidelity Storage

Directors of the Fidelity Storage Co. have elected Charles F. Wilson of Sherley, Faust & Wilson to fill the vacancy caused by the death of his partner, Frederick de C. Faust. The board also declared the regular quarterly dividend of $2 per share to be paid July 15.

Building Trade Jobs Double Low of 1933



Boston, Mass., June 10.—Building is the one industry which today is retarding full recovery. It is estimated that normal activity in the building trades will give jobs to from 50 to 75 per cent of the present real unemployed. Employment in the building trades is now twice as great as at the low point of 1933. The 50 per cent gain in building employment during the past year was greater than in any other of the leading trades.

Wheat Rallies In Late Trading

Chicago, June 10 (AP).—Wheat prices rallied late today, responsive to strength of Minneapolis and Winnipeg markets and to reports of further need of rain in spring crop areas. A bullish construction was placed on the United States Government crop report issued after the day's trading was ended.

Demand Raises Steel Output To 70 Per Cent

Activity Promises to Make June Best Month of Year.

By the Associated Press.

New York, June 10.—Steel ingot production increased two points this week to 70 per cent of capacity, Iron Age reported today. The gain, the magazine said, was due to an unseasonally heavy demand for finished steel for immediate use, together with heavy orders in anticipation of third-quarter price advances. Those two factors, it said, are expected to make June the best business month of the year.

The large volume of orders has resulted in expansion of finishing mill schedules and many producers have found it necessary to start rehabilitation of production facilities which have lain idle since 1930, it was said.

Iron Age reported that among the major steel consuming outlets, only the automobile and agricultural implement makers are lessening the releases. Automobile makers are buying only for clean-up purposes, it was said, and are not expected to anticipate their 1937 model needs.

The railroad materials market has been enlivened by the first of the secondary rail orders, the steel periodical reported. "It is becoming more and more apparent," Iron Age said, "that it will be physically impossible for mills to complete shipment of all the steel placed at second-quarter prices, before July 1." Second-quarter steel probably will move during a large part of July, it was said. And with regular customers' orders entering the market a sharp reduction in July production may be avoided.

Finished Steel Shipments.

New York, June 10 (AP).—The United States Steel Corporation reported today an increase of 4,190 tons in the shipments of finished steel products in May. Last month's total was 984,097 tons compared with 979,907 in April and 592,915 in May, 1935. The shipments reported for last month were the best for May since 1930.

On The Air Today

What might well have been a splurge on the part of the National Broadcasting Co. in broadcasting pre-Louis-Schmeling fight programs loses by a nose to the big arena at Cleveland. However, the maulers are not being entirely overlooked, and if you're interested in varying your feature broadcast menu try WMAL, at 2:15, and WRC, at 5 for descriptions of what is going on in the Joe Louis training camp at Lakewood.

"Clem McCarthy, who will describe the big fracas from Yankee Stadium the night of June 18, will give the two previewes today. He'll be assisted by George Hicks, of the N. B. C. announcing staff. McCarthy will describe the hooks and upper cuts the "Brown Bomber" employs on his sparring partners, and Hicks will do a bit of an interview of the challenger.

At 5, the interviewing gets right down to the fine details. Louis' chef, doctor, trainers and others of his retinue will tell how they condition their man for the big encounter.

Schmeling is not being overlooked. His turn comes Saturday, at 2:30, WMAL.

Meantime, the convention rolls along in its all-sweeping fashion, wiping out some of your favorite programs and staying no more on air schedule than you would expect.

This is quite proper, inasmuch as no political convention (or any other body or business concern, for that matter) governs itself by split-second timing as does the broadcast industry. Senator Steiwer, for example, could not, nor would he be expected to, sacrifice a perfectly good keynote speech in order to "be off the air" on schedule at a given time.

Similarly, both networks announce in advance for the benefit of newspaper readers, that their schedules from the convention will be between specified hours for the following day. And then, when the time arrives for those pre-announced pickups from the convention, they frequently do not materialize.

Such changes cannot be anticipated and all concerned are doing all in their power to keep on announced schedules.

Yesterday, the N. B. C. stations were scheduled to begin broadcasts from Cleveland at 11 a. m. The timetable on this page showed it so. But hours after the timetable was printed and the paper was in your home, a change to 12 noon was made necessary. This causes some irritation with some listeners, who phone to learn whose "negligence" or "error" it might be that the program wasn't heard as scheduled.

There is no negligence or error. Thousands of persons are involved and must be considered in broadcasting an event such as the convention. The time simply was changed in this instance from 11 to 12—and nothing could be done about it by anyone.

APPLE MARY

By Martha Orr

WHY, MARY, I THOUGHT YOU'D BE DOWN IN THE MOUTH OVER THE NEARNESS OF YOUR TRIAL—
OH, I'VE HAD ANOTHER TALK WITH A "LITTLE BIRD".
YES, AND I'VE SEEN HIM, TOO.
APPLES 5¢
SORRY, I CAN'T, BUT WHEN MY TRIAL COMES UP, MR. LOOTER IS GOING TO BE THE MOST SURPRISED MAN IN THIS COUNTRY.
TELL ME ALL ABOUT IT, PU-LEASE—
THEN YOU WON'T NEED THE MISSING PICTURE?
YES, DRAT IT, BUT I'M COUNTING ON YOU FOR THAT, AND YOU MUST NOT FAIL ME.

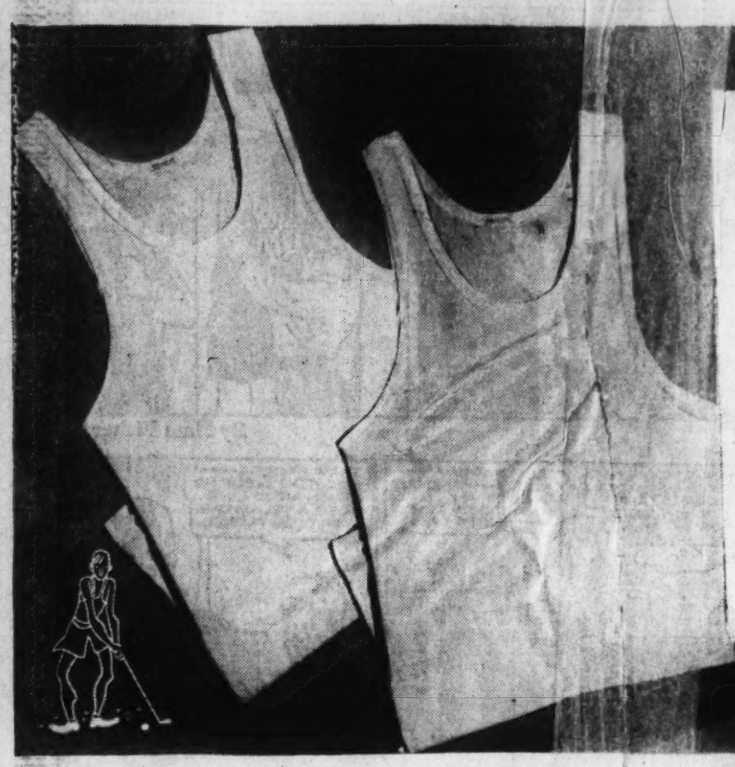
Celanese

For a Cool, Comfortable Summer!

Celanese was meant for summer just as surely as summer was meant for fun. For celanese takes all the discomfort out of summer heat and leaves you triple-distilled, unadulterated fun. Celanese is cool because it is porous; it gives your skin a chance to breathe. It is one of the fastest-drying fabrics known . . . in underwear that's a blessing and in bathing suits it's a great convenience. Salt water and acids do not affect celanese wearing qualities; hence longer life for underwear and bathing suits.



GLEAMING WHITE CELANESE IN

Shirts and Shorts

White and coolness go hand in hand. These celanese shorts and superb tailoring go hand-in-glove. They're tailored for summer comfort and styled for fit. Both the shorts and the shirts are cool and porous, as celanese always is. Shirts in sizes 34 to 46. Shorts in sizes 30 to 44.
